Concern focuses on PCEP

BY M.B. DILLON

Staff at Plymouth-Canton Educational Park are selling students short by failing to consistently enforce the rules.

That's the contention of a growing number of individuals troubled by the fact that students are allowed to congregate outside in groups of up to 100 or more to smoke; leave campus; miss up to eight classes before parents are notified; eat in stairwells and hallways; violate the dress code; swear; use undue familiarity with each other; loiter and litter.

Boys' bathrooms at Canton and Salem High schools lack toilet paper and soap; and frequently paper towels, says a parent. Adults using classrooms in the evening - particularly for CPR instruction - say getting down on the floor to practice on dummies is most unpleasant because of spilled pop that attracts fruit flies and leaves floors sticky and dirty.

School officials began hearing such complaints last year from Lynn Gregg, an assistant principal at John Glenn High School whose son attends Plymouth's Central Middle School. He's considering sending his son to a private school unless things improve.

Recently, special education teacher Ken Smith has addressed the board of education about the inconsistent enforcement of the student code, saying "I don't understand why we let a lack of discipline affect the learning of our youth.

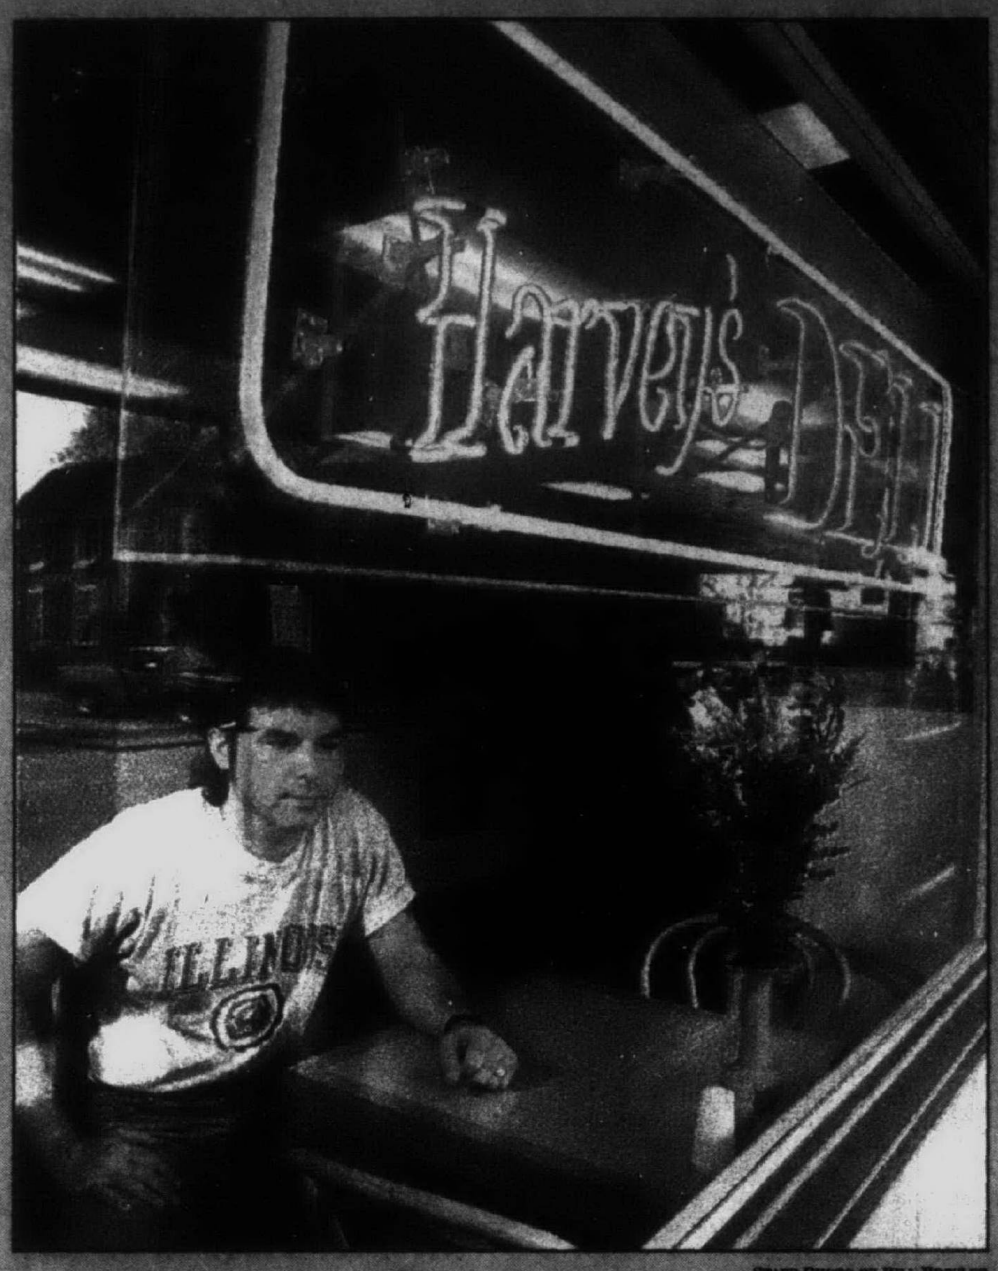

"There are good students here; I've never met a bad kid. Our teachers are very good; so are our goals and curriculum," said Smith, a 30-year teacher involved with several youth programs including Canton's "Character Counts."

Among the things that most bother Smith is the lax attendance policy, which says parents will be informed "when a student accumulates eight total absences."

"It's a little late. By that time, students have an academic problem, but it's accepted," he said. The PCEP handbook says teachers should - not

City sign enforcement: A help or a hindrance?

BY KEVIN BROWN
STAFF WRITER

While some Old Village business people are fuming over strict enforcement of the city's sign ordinance, some say they appreciate efforts to upgrade the look of the north side of town.

"I understand where they're coming from, they want to clean it up - sometimes people take advantage of the situation," said Greg Huddas, owner of Yer Grampa's Moustache on Liberty Street.

Huddas said he's been cited before, not over signs, but for boats parked behind his business and for a lawn mower left out.

"I'm the only one that cut my grass here for 20 years and they give me a ticket," he joked.

For signs, he said, "I think it is good. Some of them get ridiculous."

Vorva files lawsuit for school bond re-election

■ A challenge to the Plymouth-Canton Community Schools' bond election could mean a setback for construction of new schools.

BY M.B. DILLON
STAFF WRITER

A legal challenge of Plymouth-Canton Community Schools' special election could mean a delay in the construction of new schools; bus and computer purchases; and capital improvements in the district, according to John Birchler, the schools' executive director for business and operations.

Jerry Vorva, former state representative and a Plymouth City Commission candidate, filed a complaint in Wayne County Circuit Court Wednesday, asking for a re-election.

By a 96-vote margin, voters approved a 25-year, $79.7 million bond issue March 22.

The suit was filed on behalf of Vorva and the 716 voters whose ballots weren't counted due to errors with the district's new touch-screen voting machines.

A hearing is set for May 30 before Judge James Rashid.

Vorva, represented by Plymouth attorney Stephen Boak, decided to file after the local board of canvassers tested the voting machines and determined there was no malfunction or defect in the equipment.

The three-count complaint contends that the district used the machines without the required state authority; that the "voting system prevented or inhibited a person from casting a valid ballot; and that the denial of "equal protection under the law...resulted in the denial of a vote to 716 voters."

The action "could mean schools won't be built as soon as we'd hoped," said Birchler. "If we end up with court action, I have no idea how long it will take. There's certainly a possibility it could delay the opening of the schools, depending on how long it would be tied up."

Despite the pending suit, the school board authorized the sale of building and site bonds Tuesday night.

"They were very brave doing that," said Boak. "I don't know why there is this seeming rush to spend the taxpayers' money when there may not be authorization to do so.

"I would assume that just because they got authority Tuesday night that they didn't run out Wednesday and start selling bonds. They were aware that this lawsuit was in the offing. I would not think that our public trustees would look upon the spending of money so lightly that they would jeopardize it while this suit is pending."

Birchler said the district "hasn't been served with anything, to my knowledge. Actually taking bids on the bonds would not have happened until sometime in June. Work

Landfill dumps on city

BY KEVIN BROWN
STAFF WRITER

If you think old graveyards are scary, consider the specter posed by old landfills.

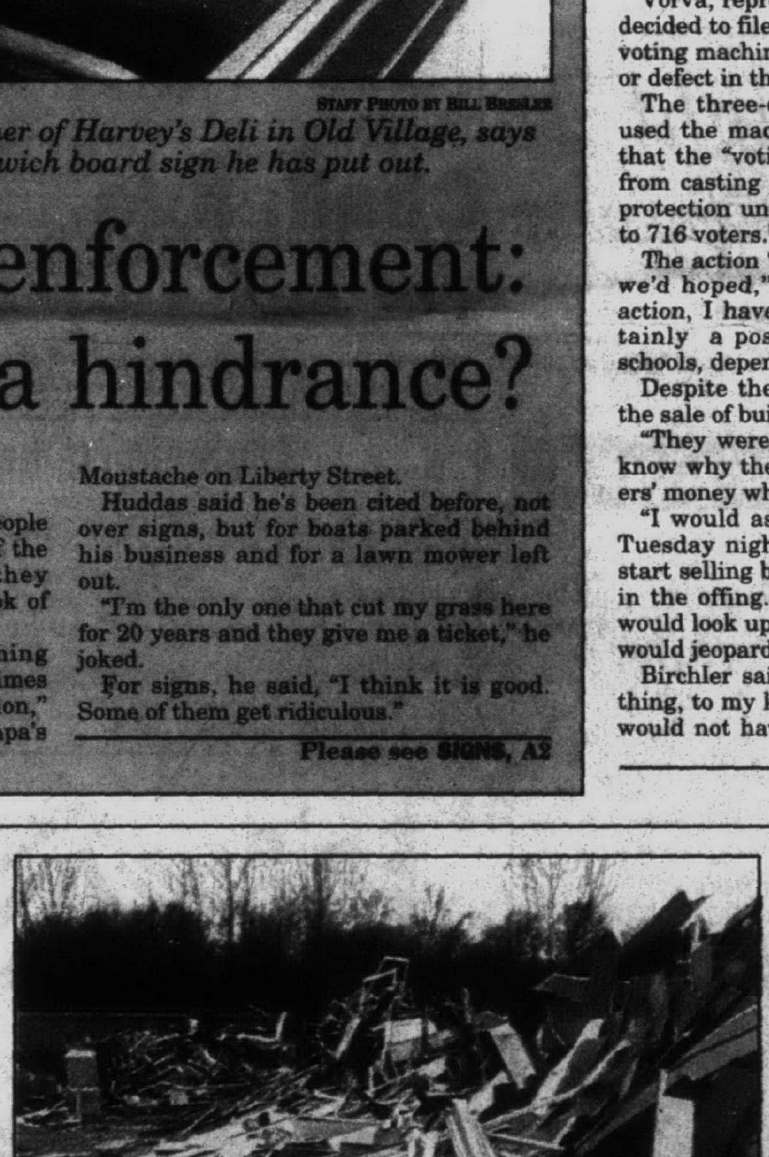

At a special meeting Thursday, the city of Plymouth's legal staff presented to city commissioners the possibility the city could be sued to help pay cleanup costs for the former Nankin dump near Warren and Newburgh roads in Westland.

What's scary is that the city government will likely pay thousands of dollars to head off an even larger settlement - and there's no hard evidence that city trash was ever dumped there.

Friends climb the scrap heap together

BY RENEE SKOGLUND

They were immigrants - Jews from Eastern Europe and Italians - poor but unafraid of hard work. With little more than a horse-drawn cart or a battered pick-up truck, they canvassed the cities and countryside for scrap metal.

Today, their legacy, a network of scrap metal companies across America, supplies the raw material - the iron, steel, copper, aluminum and zinc - that fuels the industrial economy.

Hugh Goldsmith, 33, of Ann Arbor, is a third-generation scrap metal dealer on both sides of his family. He and his partner of 15 years, Doug Billingsley, own Haggerty Metals in Plymouth Township. About a third of the yard's 14 acres is covered with scrap.

What is one man's vision is another's nightmare. Neighbors complain about the "mess."

"It's noisy and there are piles of metal here. I really don't know any other way to do that," said Goldsmith, a mild-mannered Russian history major.

Yet, there is a surrealistic appeal to the scrap yard: Mountains of aluminum

Barbecue ban is put on ice pending rewrite

BY KEVIN BROWN
STAFF WRITER

A barbecue grill ban for some Plymouth Township apartment and condo dwellers was put on hold by township trustees on Tuesday.

Specifically, the new ordinance would prohibit barbecue grills on apartment and condominium patios - if there is a patio or cantilever or overhang above that deck or patio on which the grill sets.

Township trustees on Tuesday were presented with the second reading of a 1996 BOCA Fire Prevention Code ordinance. The ban on patio grills was among provisions of the upgraded fire code.

But instead of passing the ordinance, trustees sent it back to Township Attorney Tim Cronin for revision. Some trustees maintained language prohibiting apartment or multi-dwelling grills, when there is a overhang above, was not clear.

The proposed ordinance prohibited grills "outside a building or portion thereof containing more than a single dwelling unit where the heat or flame from the combustion shall be transmitted or rise from one dwelling unit underneath, below or beneath an outcropping, balcony or porch of another dwelling unit."

Trustee K.C. Mueller said the ordinance language could state that such grills are prohibited when units are stacked vertically.

Trustee Ron Griffith asked fellow trustees if they would support removing this part of the revised ordinance. "We should let apartment owners deal with individual tenants as they see fit," he said.

Fire Chief Larry Groth responded, "I'm approaching this from a fire prevention standpoint." He said that in recent months, grill fires at apartments destroyed 12 apartment units in Sterling Heights and caused the evacuation of residents of a Canton complex.

But Griffith said he was concerned about creating ordinances "that start chasing grills around town."

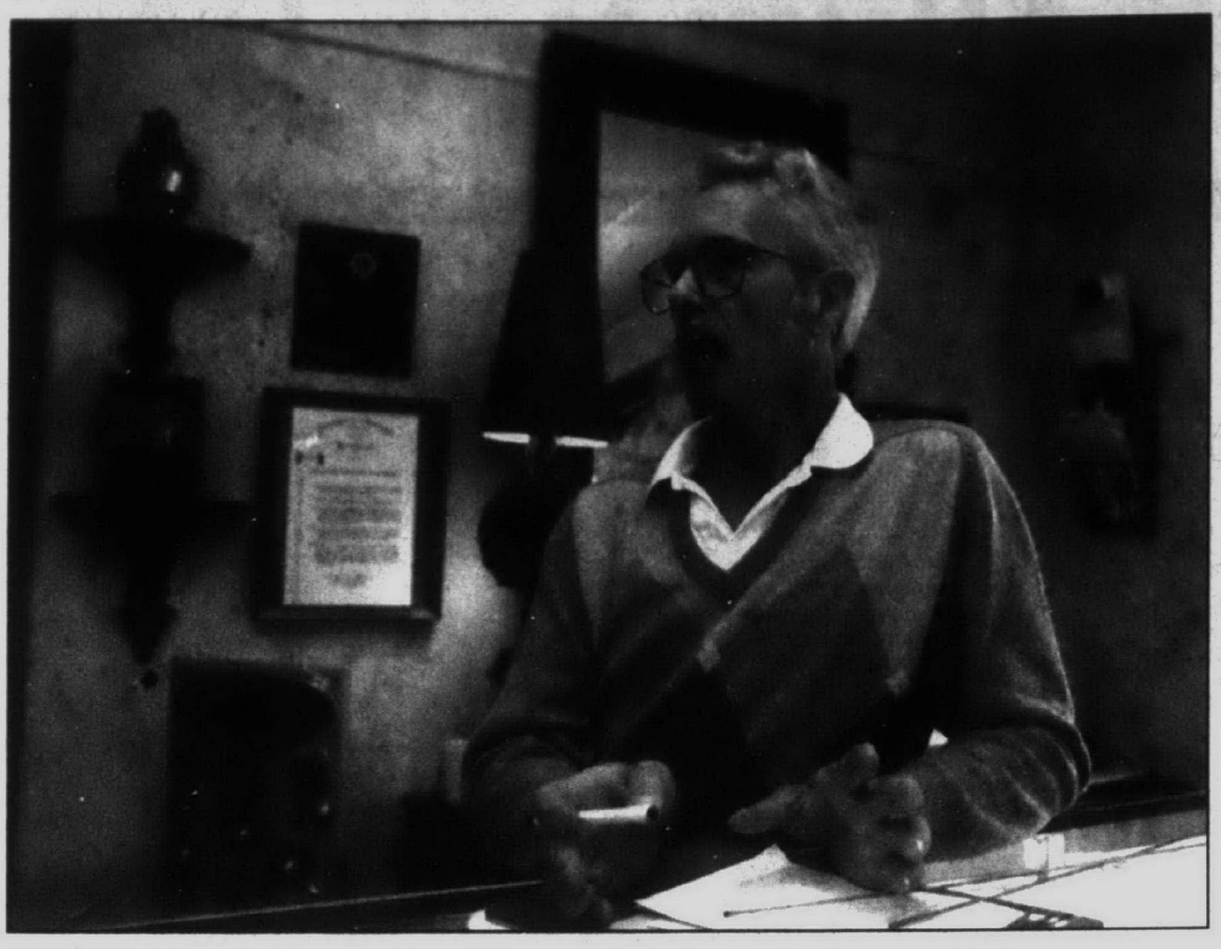

"I have a fear you're going to push these people indoors, you're not really going to achieve your purpose," he said.

His motion to delete the language from the proposed ordinance was defeated, as trustee Charles Curmi was the lone trustee joining him in supporting the motion.

"I agree with the fire chief, we need to support the owners of these apartment buildings," Mueller said.

Supervisor Kathleen Keen McCarthy said a 20-year township apartment dweller called her to thank officials for considering the ordinance.

By opting to restart the approval process for the revised ordinance, the quickest it could become effective would be early summer.

Warned: Paul Bezaire, owner of of Piccadilly's House and Garden on Mill, said he was warned about a sign he put up at his store. He removed the sign and was not cited. Merchants in Old Village had varied opinions about the city's sign ordinance and enforcement.

"I think the majority have been sandwich signs," said Kim Guenther, owner of the Lower Town Grill. "I don't know if they hurt anything, as long as they're removed at night."

Guenther said he hadn't been cited. "We've kept to the rules and regulations," he said.

"I'm more concerned about the cost of fish."

Dan Sarb, owner of Harvey's Old Village Deli on Mill, said he hasn't been cited for putting out a sandwich board sign Saturday mornings, but some of his neighbors have.

"Personally I don't want everyone throwing every kind of junk sign out there, but the city should show them some sort of guidelines."

"The city and the businesses should get together and come up with some reasonable guidelines," Sarb said, adding warnings should be issued before tickets are written.

Paul Bezaire, owner of Piccadilly's House And Garden on Mill, said after he was warned about a banner that violated the ordinance, he took it down and wasn't cited.

"If the signs look like they're professionally made, fine, if they're schlocky, they should keep them down," he said.

"This is not right. We're trying to make a living," said Bill Haio, owner of Bill's Market on Mill.

"I have a different business than other people do, it's a food business. The way they treated me is very bad. He (the city ordinance officer) put his finger right in my face, I had a neon sign by the register, he said if you don't remove it I'm going to ticket you."

"My uncle was here seven years, and said 'I never heard nothing," Haio continued. "I've been here almost a year and a half, and they come in screaming in my face."

"I personally think they should give us the chance to put up temporary signs, temporary signs is not bad business," Haio said.

"How come in the township everyone has signs on their windows, and downtown? This is not right, were trying to make a living," he said.

needs to be done before authorities can go ahead."

Vorva says the district "intentionally and maliciously tried to make sure everyone with children got out to vote, but that other people didn't. That's why they held the election on a Saturday when regular election day is Monday; to confuse people.

"They intentionally held it in March, knowing that a lot of senior citizens are in Florida or someplace warmer. Also, unlike surrounding jurisdictions, they didn't automatically send out applications for absentee ballots. They did that because they didn't want those people to vote; the same reason the did it on Saturday, and in March. We are saying there's an equal protection problem that violates the Constitution."

will - seek parental support in cases of continued tardiness, Smith added. "Businesses are going to want these young people to be on time, and to be there after they're hired. We should be helping young people grow up to be good citizens, but we aren't doing that."

Administrators say the size of the park and student body (4,600 pupils) complicate enforcement. "The park was never intended to have so many kids," said Canton Principal Pat Patton. "There aren't that many security personnel. They can't be every place. We try as administrators to be out there."

Superintendent Charles Little says, "I continue to believe administration and teachers at the park are doing their job."

Rita McGuire, attendance supervisor at PCEP, says her department does the equivalent of "taking attendance at Joe Louis Arena every day."

She said average daily attendance at the park is 95.3 percent. While policy requires parents to be called after eight absences, they're often called "after five absences. I wish we could call every time a student was absent," said McGuire. "However with the resources allocated to attendance, I think we are doing a very responsible job."

Pat Sarna is a special education paraprofessional at the park. "I am really disgusted with a couple matters, and one is the foul language used by students," she said. "I listen to it every day, and it's getting worse. When I go by and hear it, I say 'Excuse me?' and the kids will say, 'Excuse you what?' or 'F--- you.' You don't know them, and you can't do anything about it.

■ 'Three times a day, my classes are disrupted by pagers going off. There are kids who give no respect to teachers, and teachers allow it. There's a lack of consistency in rule enforcement.'

–High school senior

"It's disturbing to me to have to split kids apart who are in the hall making out. I shouldn't have to do that. I've seen kids spit in girls' hair from the top of the stairs. It's disgusting."

Sarna says fellow staffers are surprised at her attempts to discipline students. "They ask me, 'Aren't you afraid they're going to wreck your car?' Someone has got to take a stand. I can't see how come it has gone this far," she said.

A senior in student government said things are "just ridiculous. Kids are allowed to skip classes and wear pagers. Three times a day, my classes are disrupted by pagers going off. There are kids who give no respect to teachers, and teachers allow it. There's a lack of consistency in rule enforcement," said the student, who asked not to be named because she doesn't want to jeopardize her college scholarship. "I am pretty self-disciplined, but with all these distractions, it's going to deter you from learning," she said.

The PCEP student conduct code bans pagers, tape players and other electronic devices on school property. The code calls for their confiscation by teachers and administrators.

Canton Township also has a municipal ordinance prohibiting possession of pagers by minors.

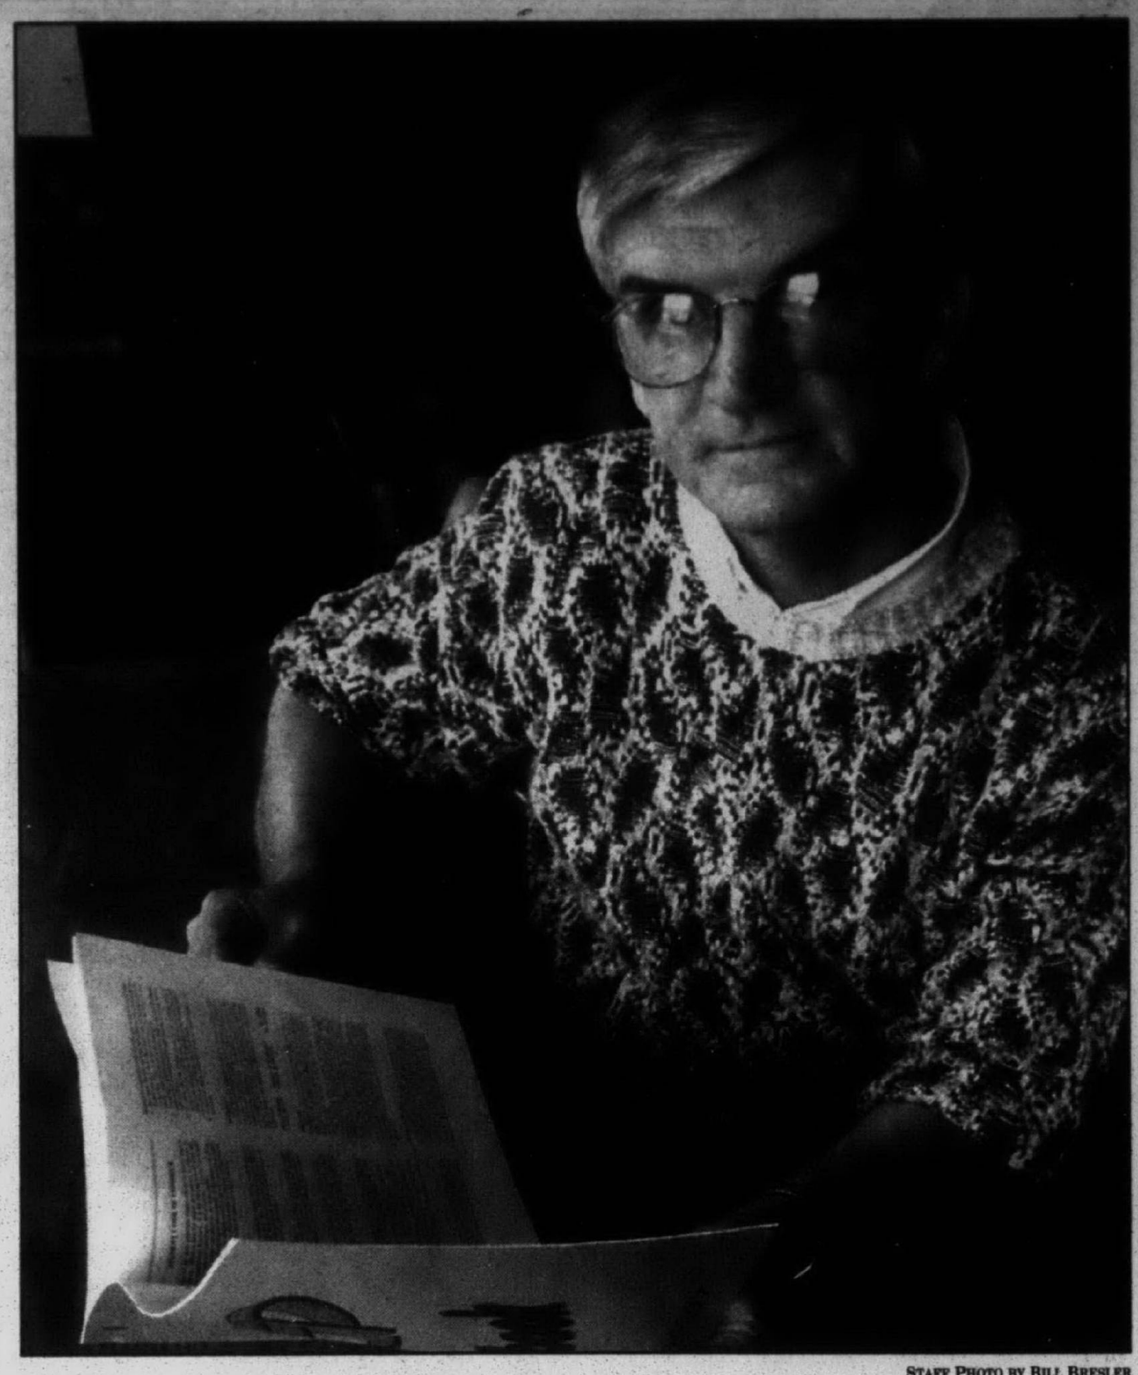

The senior said she sees kids "falling through the cracks. "There are too many loopholes for kids to fall into. I think if students felt that they actually mattered and they weren't just a number, it would have a huge affect. Kids lose interest and hope in themselves. We have plenty of teachers who really care. Sometimes all a kids needs is to be fortunate enough to have one of them."

Gregg says "there are good things going on at the high schools. But that doesn't mean it's OK to let bad behavior exist. If we can't tell 14-,15-, and 16-year-olds what proper behavior is, then they will never learn. We as adults aren't doing the job we need to do."

Patton says the new third high school should help alleviate some of the problems. "We are looking forward eagerly to having more space for our high schools kids. It's very crowded here," said Patton, adding that she spends a lot of time in the halls disciplining kids when she sees dress code violations or hears vulgar language.

"I think our students - all things considered - are remarkably well-behaved," she said. "I myself feel extremely fortunate to be here, and to be able to work with the quality students we have."

The number of students being honored at this week's honors convocation is an indication of "students doing what they're supposed to do without fanfare," Patton added. "I think sometimes our perspective is lost."

doors with their screens punched out, piles of coiled copper wiring, mounds of stainless steel sinks, and scatterings of unidentifiable mechanical innards. And everywhere, shades of dull gray and rust.

Then there's the noise, a cacophony of crushing, pounding sounds often dominated by the baling machine, a Dickensonian contraption set in a deep pit and capable of compacting 20 feet of aluminium into 1,000-pound bales. The bales end up in foundries.

Goldsmith once fell into that pit. "It was pure carelessness. I was very lucky and landed on my feet."

Half of the scrap Goldsmith and Billingsley handle comes from industry and half comes from people in the building trades. They'll take pretty much everything - aluminum, brass, copper, stainless steel, some lead - but iron.

They pay by the pound, except for catalytic converters, which are bought by the piece. Copper goes for 60 cents a pound; tungsten carbide, a hard metal used for cutting other hard metals, goes for $2.

They don't take car batteries, which are a potential source of pollution. Even though they sell the batteries as a commodity, scrap processors can be held financially responsible by the Environmental Protection Agency if they sell to smelters who create hazardous waste products.

Goldsmith said they try to broker out the large industrial deliveries as soon as possible. "Some people think we want big piles of metal here. We don't. We want big piles in other people's yards. We want the money in our bank accoutants," he said.

Goldsmith, a bit of a romantic who flies kites and bakes bread, enjoys telling the story of his grandfather, Morris Goldsmith, who came to the United States in 1910 from Georgia, Russia.

Morris Goldsmith never owned a scrap yard, but he supervised one. He was an inventive man and was responsible for the first baler of iron in Detroit.

Morris had a son, Harold, who also worked in the scrap yard. Both men took a special interest in their employees.

"The men lived in barracks on site. They were paid once every two weeks. My father (Harold) would drive around with his father finding the men who had spent their two-weeks pay - these men would sell their shoes and jackets - and bring them back to work," Goldsmith said.

Morris Goldsmith retired during World War II, a time when dealers started selling bad scrap iron to the government. "A bale can hide a lot of sins, a bag of sand hidden inside scrap. My grandfather had three sons in the Army and just couldn't do that."

Goldsmith's maternal grandfather, Herman Aberly, came from Lithuania and peddled off a wagon. He started with fruits and vegetables. "When he got done selling his produce by 10 in the morning, he thought, "what am I going to do the rest of the day,'" Goldsmith said.

Billingsley, who lives in Westland, describes his heritage as "mutt American." His father, Charles, worked for Harold Goldsmith. Doug Billingsley and Hugh Goldsmith met when they were 10 and 11. "Basically, we were two kids playing in the piles," Billingsley said.

Billingsley is a scrap man at heart. "It's basically all I have ever done. I've always enjoyed it. We get to play with some really big toys," he said.

The two men laugh when asked the inevitble "Jimmy Hoffa" questions. No. They've never found body parts. "Nothing that scary," Goldsmith said.

You've head of "scrap yard dogs?" Haggerty Metals has "Scrap Cat," a large black cat, more furry than fearsome. "There's not too many dogs smart enough not to walk on metal," Goldsmith said.

Businessman returns with generational approach

It's been more than 20 years since Bob Harter first opened his carpet and flooring business in Canton.

Although he eventually moved and spent nearly 11 years in Plymouth Township, he returned the family business to his roots in Canton last April – along a bustling Ford Road just east of Lilley.

"It's really great being back in Canton," said Harter who owns and operates H & B Carpet in the Sears Hardware center. "Business has been great back over here."

Harter's daughter Debbie Queen, a co-owner who handles finance, sales and a variety of other tasks for the local business, agrees.

"I would say Canton's pretty good – that's why we moved from Plymouth to Ford Road," said Queen, a Westland resident and eight-year veteran of the carpet business. "You can remodel your house, eat, and do just about anything along here."

Not only has the business grown from the original 20-by-60 foot retail/warehouse space to a 5,000-square-foot facility, but family involvement has grown as well. The family business now spans three generations: Harter, Queen, and her son David Teets, a freshman at John Glenn High School in Westland, also works part-time at the store where he does everything displaying carpet samples to sweeping up and answering the phone.

"I do general maintenance – whatever," Teets said. "I answer calls and order things. I vacuum and put carpet samples in." He said he's learned a lot about how a business operates by working here.

Harter said a sense of family is important in his business in more way than one. After 20 years in business, he is also finding that he is installing flooring for second generations of families. "I love meeting the people – going to their homes," he said.

He also enjoys working with his family. "It's really nice to be in business with my daughter," he said. "We don't always agree, but I know more about her now than I ever did."

How does a small business survive in this day of large corporations? Harter and Queen say their involvement five years ago with a centralized buying group – CarpetMax of Dalton, Georgia – has allowed them to keep prices down and be competitive in the marketplace.

Home again: David Teets (left), Debbie Queen and Bob Harter spend long hours at H & B Carpet in Canton. Harter has returned to the township he started his career in.

"We saw strength in numbers and we were standing alone," said Harter. "We're paying less today than we were four years ago." He said in 1977, he was installing carpet for $14.99 a yard; and 20 years later, a better quality carpet is being installed for the same price. Although prices have remained stable, the market has changed: in 1977 there were some 500 carpet mills, and there are less than 50 today.

"It's only gotten better," he added, referring to both warranties and the carpet product itself.

In addition, H & B has taken on a full line of area rugs ("very hot" items, according to Harter) and also has laminate and other types of popular flooring. They offer installation and warranty their labor for the life of the home where it is being installed.

Most of their installers have been with them for 10 years or more; one has been installing carpet for 46 years.

Queen said she or Harter frequently visit customers' homes to work with then on colors and other design details. "We can do custom work," she said, including borders on linoleum and carpet.

Harter has some words of advice for those considering opening a small business: "get a good accountant and listen; don't be afraid to take a chance because it's only money; and listen to your customers – they'll tell you all you need to know about yourself. Don't assume."

Engler road plan outlined for CWW board

BY KEN ABRAMCZYK
STAFF WRITER

Jim Ryan believes the average motorist will hardly notice the difference.

Ryan, deputy director of Gov. John Engler's southeastern Michigan office in Detroit, said Engler's proposed 4-cent increase in the gas tax would keep the 19-cent total below the national average, and below every Great Lakes state except Indiana.

"You drive about 15,000 miles a year," Ryan said. "Four cents is about $20 to $25 a year."

Ryan appeared May 9 before the Conference of Western Wayne to outline Engler's proposed $570 million increase in annual funds to repair the state's roads and highways and reform the jurisdiction over those roads.

The CWW is a consortium of elected officials from the cities of Belleville, Dearborn, Dearborn Heights, Garden City, Inkster, Livonia, Northville, Plymouth, Romulus, Wayne and Westland and the townships of Canton, Huron, Northville, Plymouth, Redford, Sumpter and Van Buren.

But officials from the Michigan Muncipal League, a legislative liaison representing Michigan cities and townships, had not figured yet how specific local Wayne County communities would fare under Engler's proposal. County officials already have expressed concerns about the state taking jurisdiction of 90 percent of Michigan roads.

Engler hopes to raise $200 million annually through the gas tax hike, $200 million through increased federal funds and $130 million by ending the diesel discount, increasing registration fees for commercial trucks, creating an overweight truck fee, ending the spillage allowance and general fund offsetting from savings in other departments.

In addition, tort reform to stop outrageous lawsuits provides another $10 million and "wrapup" of insurance coverage for construction projects is expected to save another $30 million.

Road repair, reform

Engler's plan — Build Michigan II — would improve more than 3,300 miles of road each year — an increase of 1,125 miles repaired annually.

"Spending on road construction and repair will increase by $2.8 billion over the next five years," Ryan said. "This proposal not just increases (road) money, but it creates systematic changes throughout the system."

Engler wants to take over roads that meet eligibility for federal roads. "These are the most heavily traveled roads and the most expensive to keep up," Ryan said. Ninety percent of Michigan's roads would fall under state jurisdiction under Engler's plan.

Currently, counties maintain jurisdiction over 58 percent of Michigan roads, the state 28 percent and cities 14 percent.

That system also gives 8 cents to local and county governments for road repairs, and 7 cents to the state. The new 4 cent hike would give an additional 3 cents

Rouge cleanup set for June 7

Volunteers continue to play a major role in the Rouge River's "comeback" story.

That will be evident on Saturday, June 7 when more than 2,500 people are expected to converge on the river for Rouge Rescue '97.

Without volunteers who participate in the 12th annual Friends of the Rouge river cleanup, the Rouge would be clogged with fallen trees and litter.The cleanup is a chance for people to see the river's problems and its potential for being a valuable recreation and economic resource.

In addition to removing fallen trees and other debris from the river, as they have since 1986, volunteers at clean-up sites throughout Wayne, Oakland and eastern Washtenaw counties will also plant trees, build and groom wood-chip walking paths, and build nesting boxes for wood ducks, bluebirds, and brown bats.

They'll also help prevent future pollution by stenciling storm drain inlets with a warning against dumping toxic materials like used motor oil, paint, and lawn or household chemicals.

For the third consecutive year, Rouge Rescue will also include the collection of returnable bottles and cans, which can be redeemed at Farmer Jack supermarkets to support the Friends of the Rouge Education Project, a school-based environmental education program.

Cooperating in this project are Farmer Jack, local bottlers of Coca-Cola and Pepsi Cola, FILA, Imperial Sports and WJBK- Fox 2.

Rouge Rescue sponsors are Ford Motor Co., Waste Management Inc., the Detroit Water & Sewerage Department, City Management Corp. and WJBK Fox 2.

Police testify that parks and rec director had gambling problem, borrowed money

BY DARRELL CLEM
STAFF WRITER

■ Westland police trailed Skene - the former Plymouth parks and recreation director - to a Windsor gambling casino as they investigated allegations that he embezzled money from the city-run Bailey Recreation Center.

Fired Westland Parks and Recreation Director Charles Skene admitted that he had a gambling problem and that he borrowed money from his department's safe, a police official testified Wednesday.

"He admitted that he was addicted to gambling," Lt. Gary Sikorski said during Skene's preliminary hearing in Wayne District Court.

Westland police trailed Skene - the former Plymouth parks and recreation director - to a Windsor gambling casino as they investigated allegations that he embezzled money from the city-run Bailey Recreation Center, where the parks department is based, Sikorski testified.

Skene, 46, admitted during an interview that he also gambled illegally, Sikorski said. A search of trash that Skene discarded near Westland City Hall while he was under surveillance revealed paperwork showing that Skene had more losses then wins, he said.

Skene visited the Riverboat Casino twice one evening, and he was seen entering his office after work hours between the visits, Sikorski said.

In a deepening probe being investigated by Livonia police, Skene also is suspected of withdrawing money from a bank account for a local softball association that used him as treasurer, Sikorski testified.

Skene is suspected of illegally taking money from the softball club to replenish funds he had taken in Westland, the lieutenant said from the stand.

Sikorski's statements came during a preliminary hearing that ended Wednesday with Skene being ordered to stand trial in Wayne County Circuit Court on five felony embezzling charges. He could face a maximum 10-year prison term if convicted.

"Obviously we are disappointed," defense attorney Stephen Boak said after Visiting Judge Glen Valasco made his ruling. "We see the evidence — or lack of evidence — in a much different light."

Boak predicted that Skene will be acquitted at trial. Skene remains free on a $5,000 personal bond.

Skene is accused of embezzling from a Bailey Center safe where his department's money was kept and where a therapeutic booster fund for disabled people was stored. The incidents allegedly occurred from Aug. 7, 1996, to April 12 this year. Mayor Robert Thomas fired him on April 22.

City Finance Director Michael Gorman testified that Skene's department failed to turn over about $7,000 in parks and recreation monies collected during six days spread over four months last year.

Written documents indicate the amounts that should have been submitted by Skene's office to the city treasurer's office, Gorman said.

However, Skene's secretary, Nora Herbert, testified that the city has cashed checks submitted by the parks department on the days in question.

Assistant Wayne County prosecutor Danton Wilson indicated later that the checks could have been slipped into deposits on other days to throw off any potential investigation.

Herbert and Margaret Martin, therapeutic program supervisor, testified that they knew of Skene taking money from funds and leaving personal checks. But Herbert noted that the city had no policy against such actions and that other employees had written personal checks for money.

Martin said she didn't object to Skene writing a personal check and taking therapeutic program money, although testimony indicated that she had a difficult time finding Skene when she fell short on cash and needed him to replace a personal check with cash.

Testimony from Budget Director Elizabeth Duggan indicated that some of Skene's checks weren't dated and didn't include the name of a payee, specifically the city of Westland.

Sikorski testified that he asked Skene during the investigation about one check that wasn't properly written. Sikorski said Skene told him, "I can't tell you why."

Boak argued that Skene shouldn't stand trial because he used personal checks to repay the money he took and because the city had no firm policy against employees borrowing funds.

"The city of Westland is certainly guilty of bad business practices," he said.

But the prosecutor argued that Skene's checks amounted to "miniature confessions."

Valasco said, "The fact that the money was taken for one minute ... constitutes embezzlement."

Even though a check of city records from 1955-65 shows no evidence of city trash taken there, either the federal EPA or the 3M Company - a waste producer assessed $800,000 in cleanup costs at the Nankin dump - or others assessed damages could sue the city to recover costs, City Attorney Don Morgan said.

A settlement offer - presented by parties who've already paid some dump cleanup costs - asks for Plymouth to pay $60,000. Other neighboring communities have also been asked to pay toward a settlement.

City commissioners on Thursday directed Morgan to seek to negotiate an amount less than $60,000, in hope of making the issue go away.

Attorney Mike Caldwell, assisting the city on the case, said legal costs to defend against such a lawsuit would surely be higher than $60,000.

But payment of such a settlement does not necessarily mean an end to potential city liability, he said.

By city records, trash collected for the city by a private contractor, Denski Brothers, was to be dumped at the Salem Township dump used then by the city.

Caldwell told city commissioners that one former Denski Brothers employee said in a deposition that Plymouth dumped 2 cubic yards of trash there during the period being studied.

Yet, the employee also contradicted himself, saying he didn't know whether city trash had ever been dumped there.

"Do we have a responsibility as a municipality to inspect and understand what they're hauling and where they're hauling?" Commissioner Doug Miller asked.

Morgan said municipalities seeking to settle are expected to do so by the end of the month.

In the last five years, the city has paid more than $1.2 million to perform changing cleanup requirements at the city's former dump in Salem Township, to satisfy federal environmental regulations.

Public can discuss I-275 construction at meetings

The Michigan Department of Transportation has scheduled two 'town hall' meetings to educate the public about improvements to more than 28 miles of I-275.

The construction is scheduled to start in the middle of June.

The first meeting is scheduled at 6 p.m. Wednesday, May 28, at the Carleton VFW Hall, 700 Carleton South Rockwood, Carleton, and a second is scheduled for 6 p.m. Tuesday, June 3, at the Canton Township Hall, Administration Building, 115 S. Canton Center Road.

MDOT will use these informal forums to present details of new construction designs developed to better suit motorists and community needs while expediting the construction process. This approach will minimize the economic impact on communities in areas undergoing improvements.

The four construction areas are:

- From the beginning of I-275 to Telegraph Road, Monroe County
- Telegraph Road to Newberg Road, Monroe County
- Newberg Road to Northline Road/I-94, Wayne County
- Northline Road/I-94 to Five Mile Road/I-96, Wayne County.

to the state and 1 cent to counties and cities, Ryan said.

"Counties revenue would have an average 53 percent increase in revenues per mile for local roads," Ryan said. "Cities will benefit from an average of a 74 percent increase (per mile)."

But that statistic is skewed because the state would be taking over roads normally eligible for federal funds, such as Middlebelt, Grand River, Plymouth and the "Mile" roads.

Ryan sees advantages under the plan and its cost savings through "economies of scale," meaning that the price would drop for the work because separate communities would not have to bid out for portions of work and assuming overhead, labor and administrative costs per mile would drop with the use of one contractor.

Middlebelt was resurfaced in Livonia and Garden City, but not in Inkster. "There isn't a multiple jurisdiction," Ryan said. "The benefit is you have the cost efficiencies. If they bid out for 20 miles of Middlebelt, it will be a lost less expensive, instead of Livonia, Farmington Hills or other cities bidding out separately."

Plan is complex

Ryan said he received mixed reactions to Engler's plan.

"At this point, we've asked people to take a wait-and-see attitude. Most people don't understand the complexities of the plan."

Ryan acknowledged the proposal could lead to layoffs of public service employees, "if their departments aren't the most competitive bidders on that road."

"It's a possibility obviously, if they're not competitive at the best price. Local governments will have to look at those costs."

Ryan said Engler did not want to "abolish" road commissions, only reform the present system. The governor met with the Michigan Municipal League to discuss his plans.

Ryan knows Engler faces the challenges in dealing with lawmakers and lobbyists, each representing different interests.

"The last thing we want to do is raise funds and pour them into a system that is failing. It's a waste of time to raise the tax without any meaningful reform.

"We're just going to have to try to meet with everybody and try to work these things out. For the most part, they have to look at this as a starting point."

■ 'The last thing we want to do is raise funds and pour them into a system that is failing.'

Disagrees with tax hike

State Sen. Loren Bennett, R-Canton, supports Engler's reform efforts, but disagrees with the gas tax hike. Spending should be prioritized after reforms occur, he said.

Bennett said that tax hike logic was "that it's always the taxpayers' fault. We're paying 40 percent of what we take in in federal, state and local taxes, and that's more than enough."

The 22 Senate Republicans were expected to discuss the plan at a caucus plan, so Bennett has yet to receive feedback on the plan.

"Right now I have no trust in the county's ability to put out a work product that is acceptable to the taxpayer," Bennett said. Bennett requested the state auditor to review Wayne County records on road repairs and financing.

Dems have plan

For their part, state Democrats proposed a plan to provide nearly $423 million to repair Michigan's roads and bridges without raising the gas tax.

That plan calls for $60 million in additional federal funding from changes in the gas tax distribution formula, a new tax amnesty program to bring in $110 million, $69 million from interest generated by the state's budget stabilization fund, and saving $30 million by stopping the funding of state bureaucracy with gas tax revenue. They proposed increasing truck registration fees and eliminating the State Transportation Commission to raise another $17 million.

The plan assumed an increase of $53 million in gas tax revenue and targets $20 million in diesel fuel tax revenue available but not yet used.

State Rep. Tom Kelly, D-Wayne, who was with House Speaker Curtis Hertel and two other state lawmakers, said the Democrats plan contains the most realistic assumption of addition funding Michigan may receive through changes in the distribution of the federal gas tax revenue.

"Members of our Congressional delegation from both parties are working hard to bring home additional revenue," said Kelly, whose district includes Garden City.

"While we anticipate more revenue, it's unfair to our Congressional delegation to place unrealistic expectations on the outcome of their efforts. Our plan is realistic based on the latest information we've obtained from Congressional leaders and federal transportation officials."

State Rep. Robert Brown, D-Dearborn Heights, whose district includes Redford Township, said he couldn't understand why Engler waited until the "last minute," with an impending deadline of July 1.

"I thought it was an unfair way of doing this," Brown said.

State House OKs appropriations for community colleges

BY TIM RICHARD
STAFF WRITER

Legislators call it a "Christmas tree bill" – one that is drafted simply but becomes decorated with special-purpose amendments.

The $276 million House appropriations bill for community colleges turned into a Christmas tree by the time the House passed it May 13 on a 63-35 vote.

Area community colleges fared well:

• Oakland – $20.2 million, up 4.67 percent.

• Schoolcraft – $10.8 million, up 5.95 percent.

• Wayne County – $16.2 million, up 3.64 percent.

• Lansing – $21.1 million, up 5.04 percent.

The bill went to the Senate Appropriations subcommittee on higher education, which is due to start work May 20. The gross amount was close to the recommendation of Gov. John Engler though many line items were packaged differently.

There were predictions that many of the ornaments wouldn't survive.

"Banning colleges from paying for certain health services is micro-management and violates the spirit of local bargaining unit practices," said Rep. Hubert Price, D-Pontiac, chair of the House Appropriations subcommittee that drafted the bill. He predicted a House-Senate conference committee would drop the ban on using college funds to pay for abortions.

It took three separate roll calls for the House to come up with a 56-50 approval of the amendment banning abortion funding. Here is how area lawmakers voted:

Yes – Bob Brown, D-Dearborn Heights, Gerald Law, R-Plymouth, Deborah Whyman, R-Canton.

No – Lyn Bankes, R-Redford, Tom Kelly, D-Wayne, Eileen DeHart, D-Westland.

Protests came from Kelly – "I will not vote in favor of any legislation that obstructs or interferes with the collective bargaining process at the local level" – and Lynne Martinez, D-Lansing – "irrelevant. . . This bill has become a mixed package of poorly considered social policy decisions."

Additions

• Price won overwhelming support for his amendment adding $2.2 million for a certificate grant program permitting community colleges to train residents for specific local jobs. Oakland Community College will get the maximum grant of $250,000; Schoolcraft, $86,100.

Two Republicans attempted to amend the Price amendment to use the money for roads, but Speaker Curtis Hertel, D-Detroit, ruled it out of order because it was a transportation amendment to an education bill.

Legislators tangle over test marks

BY TIM RICHARD
STAFF WRITER

The Michigan Senate and House are in a tangle over whether High School Proficiency Test marks should be noted on a graduate's records.

Parents and students have objected to the cryptic "proficient," "novice" and "not yet novice" notations that are based on 11th grade test scores. Legislators are trying to change it.

Trouble is, the Senate has amended the supplemental school bill one way, while the House has amended the main 1998 K-12 aid bill another way.

In the Senate, Democratic floor leader Virgil Smith of Detroit accused Republican Mike Bouchard of Birmingham of "plagiarizing" and "stealing" a Democratic amendment. Democrats Gary Peters of Bloomfield Tonwship and Ken DeBeaussaert of Macomb County threw in a tangle of amendments before the air was cleared.

In the end, senators agreed:

• There would be a one-year moratorium on printing all proficiency marks on diplomas.

• A graduate of age 18 or one parent could request the notation of a state-endorsed diploma and notations of "proficient" on the graduate's transcript.

That bill was passed 36-0 with two members absent – John Cherry, D-Clio, and George Z. Hart, D-Dearborn – and sent to the House.

A week earlier, the House amended the school aid bill to provide students' transcripts will include their state proficiency test scores instead of the "proficient," "novice" and "not yet novice" notations. That bill is scheduled for Senate committee action May 20.

Both take credit

Both sides of the Senate aisle took credit for the amendment.

Bouchard's news release gave him credit for sponsoring the amendment placing a one-year moratorium on reporting test results on diplomas and transcripts.

"We have honor students in my district who have failed the test, yet are attending excellent colleges," Bouchard said. "This raises some serious questions about the High School Proficiency Test and whether it accurately tests a student's aptitude."

Peters and DeBeaussaert produced their own news release saying they were "glad to see the Republicans follow (our) lead on changes to the state's controversial High School Proficiency Tests."

Peters added that his amendment to the Bouchard amendment allowed students who did well to have their good performances recorded. "This is a tough test, and a student who does well should be allowed to have it noted. However. . . we should hold harmless those students who do not do as well," he said.

Necessity Mother of Invention for saucy products

Life gets sour sometimes, and when it does, some people take the lemons and make lemonade.

Julie Stumbaugh and Barb Klaserner both raised big families, and were going through a divorce when they met 11 years ago in Redford in a class for displaced homemakers.

"The one thing we both could do is cook," said Stumbaugh. "We decided to go out to lunch together, and instantly became friends."

After some research, and experimenting in the kitchen, they started Jabars Complements, Inc. which is based in Walled Lake. Their "All Natural, Top of the Line," dressings and marinades, vegetable and fruit dips, seasoning blends, and sauces, contain no fat, and fall within dietary guidelines set by the American Heart Association.

They manufacture 30 different products. The newest – Roadkill Roy BBQ Sauce – was named in honor of Julie's son-in-law Dave, who her sons call "Roy."

"Somebody driving ahead of him on the highway hit a deer, so my son-in-law took it home and ate it. My son started teasing him so we had a caricature done of my son-in-law, and put it on this real wild looking label. Everyone loves it, and can't walk by without laughing," said Stumbaugh. "It's a sweet sauce, a little spicy. It has a unique flavor; it's a little smoky, mesquite flavor."

Sometimes things got a little sour. Like the time they were left with lots of peppers after doing a vinegar for a local restaurant. One too many peppers led to the creation of Jabars Pepper Tree Square Sauce Line, which includes Pepper Passion Marinade, Tropical Passion Hot Sauce, Flaming Pepper Passion Hot Sauce, Lemony Lemon Pepper, and Michigan Cherry Passion Hot Sauce.

Julie says people have gotten hooked on their Seasonings – Eastern Style, Gourmet Meat Rub for Beef or Lamb, Pork or Chicken, Seasoning Italian Style, and Special Blend Seasoning for Turkey & Pork, and have got to have them.

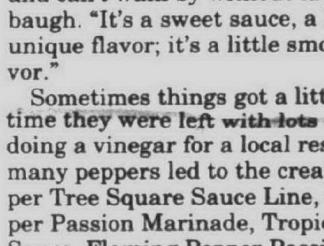

"We really love it, and love coming up with new ideas, and seeing people's reaction to them," said Stumbaugh with her partner nodding yes in agreement. "It's a rewarding thing to see something you've created enjoyed by people."

They say when God closes one door he opens another. That's certainly true for Julie and Barb who count their blessings every day. "We feel that God gave us the thought to start this business, and brought us together," said Stumbaugh.

Look for Jabars Complements at Vic's World Class Market in Novi, or call (810) 669-9211 for mail order information. Their vinaigrettes retail for $5, dressings and marinades $5, dip mixes $3, seasoning blends, $4 and sauces $3 to $5.

Sweet Lorraine

When restaurateur Lorraine Platman couldn't find a Jamaican "Jerk" Marinade that didn't list salt as the first or second ingredient, she made her own.

In store: Lorraine Platman of Sweet Lorraine's has something new in store for customers – her Sweet Poppyseed Dressing and Jamaican "Jerk" Marinade are now available at many local upscale food stores. Michigan artist Dave Moroski designed the label.

"I love it personally because I'm always on diets, and can add flavor without fat by using it," she said. Platman known for her deli in Madison Heights, and restaurants in Ann Arbor and Southfield, is an innovator who never tires of experimenting. Because honey mustard was so expensive, when she opened her deli 15 years ago, Platman made her own Honey Bee Mustard. "We couldn't afford the stuff," she said. "I made my own to keep costs down." Later she created Calypso Hot & Spicy

Fame finds Famie

Cooking demo: Chef Keith Famie demonstrates how to make one of his famous dishes turning the taping of Famie's Finds, which airs every Friday at noon on WDIV/TV 4.

Who is this wild and crazy guy who dons a chef's coat as daily attire, flails a knife in quick precision, ice fishes in Orchard Lake for a TV food spot, and cooks a fish on the engine of his truck? Part adventure seeker, part local celeb, part regular guy, but biggest part – chef. He is Keith Famie. This energetic 37-year-old is on a mission – to be the best, to have the best, and enjoy the best. Not all bad for a guy who didn't go to the Culinary Institute of America.

Traveling around, and learning from well-known culinary professionals after graduating from Farmington High School in 1978, Famie credits Michigan Culinary transplant chefs Duglass (Douglas Gretch) from The Great Dane and Duglass Duglass, Stuart Anderson from Jacques, Yvonne Gill (now Yvonne Uhlianuk) from The Money Tree and later Tweeny's, and Chef Mitch Cheslik from The Golden Mushroom, with the European influence that set the culinary tone here in the Metropolitan Detroit area.

"It was these chefs that developed the Culinary Brat Pack," says Famie – "you know, Brian Polcyn, Steve Allen, Rick Halberg, Greg Upshur, Tom MacKinnon, Jeff Gabriel, Danny Hugelier, Ed Janos, Peter Loren, Kevin Brennen, Gary Pierce, and me." These well-known role model chefs and mentors have made way for the younger set, but their talent, influence, and training remains, and our prominent local chefs are the proof of the pudding.

In 1982 (and a mere 22) Famie started out as Chef de Cuisine at the Wisne owned Raphael's restaurant in Novi (later Chez Rafael, then renamed Too Chez), dazzling the clientele with trendy, upscale, elaborate dishes – actually opening that restaurant with talented Maitre' d, Achille Bianchi (who is still there!)

"We were an incredible combination – Achille and I, a real working relationship" relates Famie. Well, things have come full circle, and as they say 'what goes around, comes around,' and the Wisne's are Famie's cordon.

From 1988 to 1993, Famie in a mode of entrepreneurship, opened the well-known Les Auteurs, An American Bistro in Royal Oak, and later transformed it into the Cowboy motif Durango Grill. In 1995, after a short ride, the doors of Durango closed. Climbing back in the saddle, Keith concentrated on Famie's Finds, his (sometimes adventure-filled, always delicious) cooking-segments, his future, and his two young children.

What other chef would have a canoe, paramount in the midst of Victor Saroki's beautifully designed downtown Birmingham eatery? The canoe is not part of the fabulous decor at Forté, but a prop for one of his Famie's Finds WDIV-TV 4 tapings. Keith seems endlessly happy and passionate about his current life – he's got the formula down after a few big disappointments – both professional and personal. And working "on the line" nightly at Forté seems to be part of the recipe to his happiness.

"I'm a make everything work kinda-guy," says Famie, and his restaurant credo is "lets have fun and do our job." Keith is certainly doing that – his drive is as endless as his passion for cooking – a master of public relations, he knows how to put things together. His approachable style is certainly a likable quality.

The food at Forté might be described as Mediterranean-California-style – but always on the edge. "My cooking is now reflective of my lifestyle – healthier. I'm a workout freak, I box every day, and I eat better."

Fresh food is key. Dishes range from simple to complex, but always utilize the freshest of ingredients. The Wisne's (Epoch Enterprises) are smart restaurateurs. Toni Wisne specifically

FOCUS ON WINE
BY RAY & ELEANOR HEALD

Take a sip of madeira, m'dear!

Madeira is a remote island in the Atlantic Ocean, 300 miles off the west coast of North Africa, and 500 miles from Portugal, the country to which it belongs. Most wine lovers know Porto from Portugal, but often fail to discover another of its fine wines, madeira.

The first Portuguese settlers brought malvoisie (or malvasia), a white grape from Crete to the island of Madeira. This grape was christened "Malmsey" by the British. Some years later, Jesuit fathers planted three other grape varieties, sercial, verdelho and bual. These four grapes create the noble madeira wine portfolio.

Once trading ships launched on the high seas to and from the New World, many stopped at the island of Madeira's deep water port of Funchal to load provisions which often included barrels of madeira, fortified by brandy addition. Fortification not only prolonged the wine's life and increased its alcohol strength, but became a part of its recognized style. Westbound ships passed through the tropics. On-board barrels of madeira experienced elevated temperatures as high as 95°F for days or even weeks. This agreeably altered the wine by giving it the characteristic "burnt" taste with a tang, favorably associated with madeira. To imitate on-board "heating" in modern times, estufagem, or the process of heating the wine in a loft, was incorporated into madeira production methods.

There's a saying in Madeira that "high is dry and low is rich." Sercial grapes grow on Madeira's highest slopes and make the driest wine. Pale or golden with a refreshing lift of acidity at the end, it is a perfect aperitif served slightly chilled. Verdelho and bual grapes are grown further down the mountain slopes. These are medium-rich, golden-colored wines. Verdelho is drier than bual and is best served before a meal or to those who prefer a dry dessert wine. Bual is distinctly designed as a dessert pour. It's good with nutty cheese such as Monalisa Gouda. Malmsey, a fragrant, full-bodied, richly-flavored, sweet dessert wine, grows in foothill vineyards. A blend of sercial, verdelho and/or bual is known as Rainwater Madeira. It's medium dry and suitable as an aperitif or as light, liquid dessert.

Wine Picks

- 1995 Quivira Sauvignon Blanc $12 is great with crab and 1995 Iron Horse Chardonnay $24.50 with grilled white fish.
- 1995 Morgan Pinot Noir $20 – with grilled salmon
- 1995 Preston Faux $12 – dynamite Rhone-style blend

Grilled beef will only taste better with the following cabernet sauvignons from the great California 1994 vintage:

- Livingston, Stanley's Selection $21.50; J. Lohr $14; Dry Creek Vineyard $18.50; Geyser Peak Reserve $28; and Murphy-Goode Reserve $34, a pick of the vintage!
- 1994 Dry Creek Vineyard Old Vines Zinfandel $18 – a steak zin
- For robust pasta dishes, try 1992 Caroso Montepulciano D'Abruzzo Riserva $15 and 1994 Brolio Chianti Classico $12 from Italy.

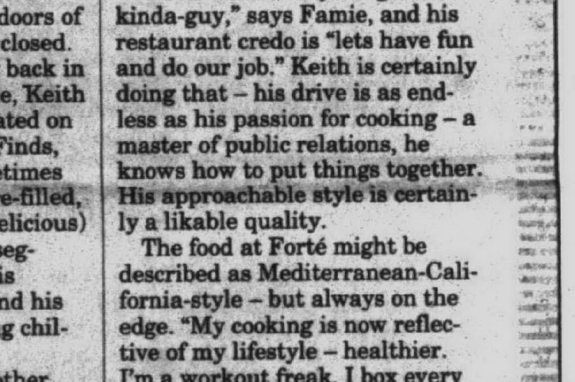

Best buys:

- 1995 Columbia Crest Chardonnay $9
- 1995 Bogle Merlot $10

Three major brands of madeira are in this market. Cossart Gordon, one of the oldest madeira shippers was founded in 1745, Leacock's in 1760 and Blandy's in 1811. The styles within each brand are different and "liking" is a matter of individual preference.

Leacock's Rainwater Madeira $14 is probably the best known. Blandy's 5 year Sercial, Verdelho, Bual or Malmsey, all $21, are light and elegant. Blandy's dry Sercial is excellent. The Cossart Gordon style is fuller, richer and sweeter. Try their Rainwater $17, 10 year bual $38.50 and 5 year Malmsey $23. Once opened, a bottle of madeira remains stable and drinkable for two to three months.

Madeiras are kitchen versatile and can be used in sauces or soups. Use madeira in place of sherry or Port in a recipe calling for either. A dry madeira (Sercial, Verdelho or Rainwater) gives a unique flavor twist to an easy chicken preparation.

works very closely with Chef Famie, and gives him the kind of free rein he needs. Designing the kitchen himself, Keith determined his needs, and created a sleek, stainless steel kitchen with a huge hearth oven, that would meet those needs, and highlight his talents.

This same chef is one of six (five other chefs, and one waitress) who give up Christmas Eve (this past Christmas Eve was their 10th), to cook for the homeless at a dinner sponsored by COTS the Coalition of Temporary Shelters. Famie is tied to the Detroit area, his family is here, and of course, Alicia and Josh ages 4 and 6.

When asked about the future, Keith relates his ideal situation – "someday I'd love a ranch out west, a place where terminally ill kids, or kids who don't have much, could come and fish and have fun."

His ideal may be cooking trout someday on a ranch, but for now, his plans include going to China to cook. In October Chef Famie, and a select crew from Forté, will prepare a special dinner in Shanghai, China, for Gov. John Engler and 125 of his guests, to celebrate the new Michigan Trade Office.

A Grand Style Buffet will highlight Michigan products producing a Michigan Menu, not dissimilar to the 1989 event Chef Famie did in Paris for 200 guests of the American Ambassador to France.

Closer to home at Forté, 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, May 20, Fontant de France wines bring together Chefs Laurent and Jacques Pourcel (twin brothers) of the Jardin des Sens, the two star Michelin restaurant in Montpellier, France along with Chef Keith Famie for a collaborative effort of talent – to kick off Forté's special monthlong Mediterranean feast for the senses.

That evening, there will be a five course prix fixe menu of small courses "a tasting menu") especially chosen and paired with Fontant wines. This event costs $75 per person plus tax and gratuity. For reservations, call (810) 594-7300.

Kitchen Glamor at Orchard Mall, on the northeast corner of Maple and Orchard Lake Roads in West Bloomfield, will offer a sneak preview of this unique event 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Tuesday, May 20. There is no charge for this cooking demonstration.

Mustard. Sweet Poppyseed Dressing is a longtime customer favorite.

A year-and-a-half ago Platman took a big step. "We saw gourmet food products connected with stores, and knew some of our items would be advantageous to home cooks," she said. Sweet Lorraine's two signature mustards, Jamaican "Jerk" Marinade, and famous Sweet Poppyseed Dressing are available for purchase at her restaurants, and 48 stores in metro Detroit including Hudson's, Merchant of Vino, Papa Joe's, Vic's, Westborn, and Shopping Center Markets.

"They're real, and come from the heart," she said. "Everyone knows we put extra effort into making it as healthy as possible," she said about her products. Look for her No-fat Roasted Garlic Balsamic Vinaigrette and No-Fat Strawberry Vinaigrette to be introduced in September. Sweet Poppyseed Dressing is $3.95; Jamaican "Jerk" Marinade $4.95, and the mustards $2.95 each.

Native West

Known for "Unique American Southwest Art," Native West, 863 W. Ann Arbor Trail in downtown Plymouth, is not the first place you'd think of shopping for salsa, salad dressing, sauces, hot and spicy dips, barbecue sauce, soup, cornbread, and chili mixes.

"Everything we sell is from New Mexico or Arizona," said Annette Horn. "We thought these food items would be a fun addition to our store."

Annette and her husband, Ken, are also award-winning chili cooks who are as serious about food as they are about art. "In our search for brands to be featured we had to be picky," said Horn explaining how she chose Coyote Cocina products, including red and green salsas, hot sauce, peach preserves, and chili honey, which are made in Sante Fe. It's a well-known brand name, created by Mark Miller, owner of Coyote Cafe, a five star restaurant.

Six Shooter Salsa by Cowpoke Cuisine and Hogwild Chili Mix are also available. "It's an absolutely wonderful mix, and won first place at the 1996 Fiery Foods challenge in New Mexico," said Horn. "Salsas are a like a mini fiesta for the taste buds. It's fun food." Native West will be offering Pinon Blend Coffee for sale this summer. Native West is open seven days. Dress salads with colorful greens, zesty toppings

Salads are a welcome addition to any meal. Colorful and crispy, they can provide a variety of flavors to fit almost any menu. As a separate course, a side dish or the main attraction, salads are one of the best ways to get one or several of your recommended five daily servings of vegetables and fruits.

It's customary to start a salad with a base of greens. Although iceberg lettuce is a traditional source of crunch, it's 95 percent water and virtually vitamin-free. Boston, Bibb or romaine lettuce are more nutritious alternatives if you prefer a mild-flavored leaf. Get the bold flavor and greater nutrition of darker greens by combining peppery watercress and arugula with more mild-mannered lettuces in your next salad mix.

Traditional green salad vegetables, such as tomatoes, green pepper, cucumber, carrots and onion contain lots of vitamins and minerals, but why not venture a little further into the garden?

The healthiest diet provides variety, and salads are a great way to introduce new and interesting foods. toss in some cooked corn kernels, crisp-tender zucchini rounds, sugar snap peas, garbanzo beans, or roasted red pepper strips. cooked grains and legumes, such as barley, lentils and bulgur wheat are fiber-and nutrient-rich additions that make your salad even more of a meal.

Many fruits mix well in vegetable salads. Sharp, juicy grapefruit is a perfect partner for crunchy, licorice-flavored fennel. Try a snappy strawberry and cucumber salad seasoned with a bit of black pepper and lime juice. Oranges are always a welcome addition to a green salad, or toss together orange slices with grated carrot, fresh dill an orange juice vinaigrette.

Dressings can be the downfall of a wholesome salad. Traditional dressings can be more than 90 percent fat and just a few tablespoons can make a significant dent in your entire day's recommended fat allowance. Get added flavor instead from the large number of low-fat or fat-free dressings available at the supermarket. Or, make your own dressing with plain yogurt, nonfat yogurt, chopped fresh herbs, flavored vinegars and fruit juices.

Sample Crisp Green Salad with Tonnato Dressing and you'll agree that low-fat doesn't mean low-flavor.

CRISP GREEN SALAD WITH TONNATO DRESSING

Dressing:

- 1 (6 1/2 ounce) can water packed chunk light tuna drained
- 1 clove garlic
- 1/4 cup Dijon mustard
- 2 teaspoons red wine vinegar
- 1 tablespoon olive oil
- 1/4 teaspoon dried oregano
- 2-3 anchovy filets, drained and rinsed (optional)
- 1/2 cup chicken broth
- Freshly ground pepper to taste

Salad:

- 8 Romaine lettuce leaves
- 8 red bell pepper rings
- 4 green bell pepper rings
- 8 slices cucumber
- 12 red onion rings (optional)

In a blender or food processor, combine the tuna, garlic, mustard, vinegar, olive oil, oregano and anchovies (if using), stopping once or twice to scrape down the sides of the container. add the chicken broth and blend until the dressing has the consistency of thin mayonnaise. Season to taste with pepper. If possible, refrigerate 2-3 hours before using, allowing flavors to blend.

Tear lettuce into bite-size pieces and mound on a serving platter. Arrange pepper rings, cucumber, and onion rings over the lettuce. Pour over 1/2 cup of the dressing and serve. (This dressing keeps 2-3 days in a tightly sealed container in the refrigerator).

Use leftover dressing on a rice salad made with diced bell pepper, red onion, green peas, and chopped Italian parsley.

Bridal beauty is a matter of style

BY JEFFREY BRUCE
SPECIAL WRITER

In order to help you produce the best wedding with memories and photos that you will be happy to bring out, I offer some advice that I have gleaned over many years of working at weddings.

Weddings are becoming more elaborate, with wedding planners proliferating to the point of being almost standard. People are creating theme weddings in order not to have the same wedding as everyone else. There are so many things that are involved in putting together a wedding that it is easy to feel that it is getting out of control. There are, however, three areas that you control, and once you have a handle on these, the others will seem more manageable.

BEAUTY AND THE BEST

JEFFREY BRUCE

The Dress: Perhaps nothing takes more time or deliberation than the wedding dress. It can set the tone for the whole wedding, and will be in every photo and memory of that day.

Make sure that you are not overwhelmed by the dress. You are wearing the dress, not the other way around. This is not a time to be experimental. Stick with the classic styles, the traditional colors and fabrics. You may want to combine a very simple style with an elaborate fabric. It is easier to tell you what not to do, or what to avoid. Do not have enormous sleeves unless you are a fan of Imelda Marcos. If you are five feet tall, you may want to rethink a 30-foot cathedral-length train. Unless you are bohemian or out to shock, you may want to avoid black and deep green. All of the following look good on a gown: pearls, beading, sequins, lace, tulle, bows, quilted fabrics, etc. But please, select only one.

Form-fitting gowns can look great, providing you have a figure that warrants this fit. Unless you have slender, wonderfully toned arms, do not wear a sleeveless dress. Similarly, you may want to pay attention to how the neckline suits your figure. Don't wear too many petticoats, unless you are producing an antebellum theme wedding. Otherwise, you will have trouble dancing, sitting down, and getting near people. The time of the day dictates which style you choose, but make sure to flatter your most positive figure asset.

The Hair: This is also not the time to do anything drastic. Do not take this opportunity to dye your hair a new color or get a tight perm. It also does not mean that you have to have your hair up. The hair style you choose should look good in an evening gown and a pair of jeans. If your hair looks its best down and to the side, then that may be the style you want to go with.

At the very least, spend some time before the wedding looking for a stylist that you trust and have your hair done in the style you intend on the day. This will take any anxiety away from your wedding day morning. If you want to dress your hair up, you can always add sprigs of flowers, or even better, wear a pair of wonderful earrings. If your dress is elaborate, then you may want to complement it with a simple hairstyle and veil. The last thing you want is your bridegroom wondering who is coming down the aisle!

The Makeup: My best advice to you is to start a few months before the wedding by taking good care of your skin. You don't want the stress of the wedding to break you out. Remember to drink a lot of water. Your makeup should look subtle but strong. That may sound like a contradiction, but it simply means that you don't want to look garish, with strange colors, with too much eyeliner.

But you need to have a great foundation, and to carry powder with you for coping with the shine that will inevitably happen. You are going to be kissing a lot of people, eating and drinking, and so it is important to repair your lipstick from time to time. If you start with a great lip liner, you will have less of a problem.

Make sure that your blusher is well applied, and stay with the roses, pinks and peaches. Avoid browns and purples, which will look out of place with your wedding dress, especially if you are wearing white, ivory or bone.

Keep in mind that everywhere you turn, people will be taking photos of you. The lighting and photographers will differ. You will want to look back with as much enjoyment as possible at the photos, and not just see a couple of red dots in a sea of white. So think of yourself as being on stage, and make yourself up for the occasion.

Response to the private appointments I held in May at the Townsend Hotel in Birmingham was so large that I have decided to put in more dates for June. If you can't join me there, I will also be visiting salons in Windsor, Highland, Ann Arbor and Flint. For further details call 800-944-6588.

Oakland Mall exhibit teaches pre-history

What are eight prehistoric animals doing at a 20th century shopping center?

Nestled amid foliage and rocks, they are roaring and twisting to entertain and inform shoppers about their world, now through July 7 at the Oakland Mall in Troy.

A computer-controlled air compressor gives the Stegosaurus, Tyrannosaurus Rex, Chasmosaurus and Protoceratops their own unique sequence of movement and sound. Their skins are molded from silicone using a patented process based on existing patterns from fossilized dinosaur skin created by Kokoro Dinosaurs of Los Angeles.

Accent the positive

Looking good requires imagemaker services

BY BARB PERT TEMPLETON
SPECIAL WRITER

Some historians argue that Richard Nixon lost the presidency to John Kennedy in 1960 simply because Kennedy had a makeup artist prepare him for the televised debates and Nixon didn't.

Today, meeting with an image-consultant is de rigueur for anyone in the public eye.

Select hair salons in the malls and on Main Streets offer hair and makeup lessons. The upscale department stores offer wardrobe planning services. But sometimes you need to seek out a professional image consultant who can help you with an overall "look".

How do they do it?

Skin tones set the pace. Once you compliment them with the right make-up, hair style and clothing, you have conquered the task of looking your best according to image consultant Dawn Bause.

"Sometimes people are attracted to colors that don't suit them. I tell them 'decorate your house in those colors but please, don't wear them," smiled Bause, owner of Color Associates in Southfield.

Bause has been helping local people get their image polished for promotions and public appearances for a decade. Her client list includes 300 women who have appointments with her twice a year to have their image reevaluated. Bause recently extended her services as an image counselor to corporations across metro-Detroit who call her in to give their staff a "professional appearance update."

"In some cases the employees are just getting lax in their look for the office," said Bause, who feels the recent surge in corporate casual attire hasn't hurt her business. "I actually have a slide show called Casual Friday that I take to these companies and it shows people what's appropriate for that day because some do get a little too casual."

Giving people frank advise about their appearance doesn't bother Bause although she admits she has to watch her tendency to offer tips that aren't solicited.

"Sometimes I end up telling someone at the airport what they should be doing," smiled Bause. "My husband says I get away with murder telling people these things but I just love it."

On the downside of the profession, Bause said being a consultant means she can't afford to ever be seen in an unpolished state.

"I can't go out anytime, without having my make-up, hair and clothes in order," she said.

Looking good at all times is something the clients of popular metro-Detroit image consultant Robin Manoogian expect.

Manoogian, owner of About Face Beauty Spa in Royal Oak, has a huge following that includes corporate heads, local media stars and national celebrities. The local make-up artist, who spent ten years providing fashion tips and a fresh look for Kelly and Company co-host Marilyn Turner, considers her new Royal Oak salon her home base. Still she manages to take her consulting show on the road a dozen times a week.

"This month I'm doing Channel 7's Robbie Timmons everyday," said Manoogian. "A few weeks ago I did Vice President Al Gore when he was in town to do an on-camera video for the Cancer Foundation."

Noting that the vice president was "quite charming", Manoogian pointed out she has had the honor of powdering the First Face on three different occasions.

"I did President Bill Clinton twice before he was elected, and once afterwards," said Manoogian. "One of the times was for the cover of Newsweek. When he came back here later he autographed the cover for me. I also did Hilary once when she was going to appear on Good Morning America and she was very, very, easy to work with," Manoogian added.

Later she was reintroduced to the first couple on several occasions while traveling as a consultant for Detroit's own Aretha Franklin. Manoogian tended to the star during several White House appearances.

More recent assignments Manoogian has enjoyed include her work with rocker John Mellencamp when he appeared at the Fox Theater last month, and her prepping of Senator Carl Levin for his recent appearance on This Week With David Brinkley.

"I enjoy my work immensely. I work probably 18 hours a day," said Manoogian. "Plus, I still do consulting for weddings or with models for photo shoots."

Manoogian is at About Face Beauty Salon (248) 399-1330; Bause is at Color Associates (248) 353-6884 or 363-8080.

See for yourself at the Carre' Blanc boutique just-opened at Somerset Collection South in Troy.

Michel is vice president of the world-renowned home linens company and he paints the designs that are ultimately printed on the linen collections' cotton duvet covers, pillow shams and sheeting.

Carre' Blanc's charming French catalog proclaims, "With blue ink, he has drawn the sea and the wind. With white, he talks about the springtime's freshness. For luck, he adds a touch of red on a sailor's hat. When Dominique Michel invites us to share his imaginary world, let us go!"

By the sea

The linen designs to which these words refer include nautical-inspired Berets Marins (The Midshipman's Dream) and Bienvenue a' Bord! (Welcome On Board), and a tablecloth collection fittingly named Herbier d'ete' (The Summertime Herb Garden).

Jean-Claude Gotheron, CEO of Carre' Blanc's new U.S. division, explained the company's philosophy.

"We produce two complete linen collections a year," he said. "From the collection, we choose several of the best designs and create serving pieces to match. It's the breakfast in bed idea," he added in his lilting French accent.

The ensembles also include bath and beach towels, robes for children and adults, and table linens. King size duvet covers range in price from $65-200, with the average price point at $100 – surprisingly affordable for European bed linens.

Gotheron says that the textiles were remanufactured for the U.S. market to assure a 180-200 thread count. Europeans prefer 140-160 maximum threads per inch.

The 1,200-square foot cottage look Somerset shop, with bleached wood flooring and lightly-pickled pine fixtures and armoires is the fifth boutique to open in the U.S. Other locations are in St. Louis, Miami, Dallas and Orlando. In business for 13 years, Carre' Blanc has 140 stores in the world, 95 of them in France.

The Somerset store manager Michel Mathieu recently relocated from France and hopes to bring a touch of Parisian romance to Troy.

His job shouldn't be too difficult in a shop draped with Mimosa, Poppy and Marguerite-covered textiles. The atmosphere will have shoppers dreaming of ProvenCal gardens and Mediterranean seascapes.

Where can I find?

Thanks to all who phoned in locations for the hard-to-find items last week!

• A reader called to say that Estee Lauder has a phone line where clients can order some discontinued products (like lipsticks) 1-800-945-ORDER, Monday-Friday 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. and Saturday 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.)

• The creator/manufacturer of Easterbrook pens, Glen Easterbrook of Livonia, called to say he takes special orders through (313) 425-2519 or by fax (313) 540-9660.

• Thanks to all the callers who offered their ice cream machines with cranks to the Daedal Doors crew. They've got all they need according to producer J.J. Bankert.

• Judy Pierce of Redford suggests that sometimes video stores will sell older versions of Disney classics to customers if they have several copies of the film. Count the films on the shelf and approach the owners. "That's how I got "Lady and The Tramp" for my daughter," she said.

We still need to find:

• A glass bowl in the shape of a fish for Janet Dixon.

• Six-story Purple Martin homes made of wood for "Patty" of West Bloomfield. "I don't want one made of metal. I'm hoping someone might build them of wood as a hobby."

• Nylon gloves for "Betty" of Redford that allow you to put on your pantyhose without tears or snags.

• A videotape copy of The Music Man for "Dennis." He is also looking for old, collectible snow globes.

If you've seen any of these items in your travels, let Malls & Mainstreets know and we'll print the answers. Please call (248) 901-2567 and relate your message and phone number slowly and clearly!

Rouge Friendly businesses cited

Several businesses in Wayne and Oakland counties were recently recognized for efforts in the Rouge Friendly Business Program.

The Rouge Friendly program is the first water quality education program in the watershed to focus entirely on helping businesses help the Rouge River.

Businesses actually can pollute the river by spilling materials or wastes in parking lots without cleaning them up, allowing materials or wastes stored outside to leak or rinse wash water down a storm drain.

Any chemical on the ground can become a water pollutant since storm water runoff and wash water collect pollutants as they travel. Whatever is washed down a storm drain eventually reaches the Rouge River and the Great Lakes without benefit of any treatment.

The program's mission is to restore the water quality of the Rouge by reducing pollutants entering the river. In this program, information and assistance is provided to businesses to help them prevent pollution.

River-friendly: Jim Jimmerson, production manager of the Observer & Eccentric Newspapers, receives a certificate from Karen Reaume, a senior scientist with Environmental Consulting & Technology. The certificate cited the newpaper for its commitment to being a 'Rouge Friendly' business.

The following businesses in western Wayne County were recently recognized as Rouge Friendly: Midwest Auto Auction, 14666 Telegraph,, Redford; SNAPP, 12999 Fairlane, Livonia; Haber Operations, 13500 Wayne, Livonia; GPD, 35457 Industrial Drive, Livonia; Guardian Plumbing & Heating, Guardian Environmental Service, 34360 Glendale, Livonia; Entela, 35550 Industrial Road, Livonia; Clearon Corp., 35750 Industrial Road, Livonia; Observer & Eccentric Newspapers, 36251 Schoolcraft, Livonia; and Orchard, Hiltz & McCliment, 34935 Schoolcraft, Livonia.

The Rouge Friendly program is sponsored by Wayne County's Department of Environment. Funding for the program's development and first years of implementation has been provided by a grant from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

Adamany: State was 'generous' to WSU

BY TIM RICHARD
STAFF WRITER

Even though the Legislature has been generous to Wayne State University, the Detroit campus' is "stretched thin" to meet changes in the new global economy, said retiring President David Adamany.

"I've had the pleasure of living through a number of economic cycles where the state has supported us generously," Adamany said at his 15th and last annual appearance before a Senate Appropriations subcommittee May 9.

"Even in the worst of times, the state has been highly favorable," Adamany said, producing a chart to show WSU has held the line on student tuitions better than any of the 14 other state universities.

Since 1983, WSU has raised tuition 81.7 percent compared to 172.5 percent at the University of Michigan's Ann Arbor campus and Michigan State University's 160.5 percent. In the middle of the pack were Eastern Michigan, sixth at 151.3 percent, and Oakland University, ninth at 135.7 percent.

Adamany, who announced his impending retirement shortly after the Legislature amended the Open Meetings Act to allow the WSU board a measure of secrecy in picking his successor, was treated like a conquering hero by the panel, which presented him a framed certificate to the accompaniment of flash cameras.

"What is your vision for the next decade?" asked Sen. John J.H. Schwarz, R-Battle Creek, chair of the subcommittee.

"We must continue to be an opportunity for worthy students to get a good education," Adamany began. "We must double as a major research university in this area. And given the distress in Detroit – conditions for children are still terrible – our public outreach must continue to expand.

"We've been one of the anchor in the redevelopment in the central city. University policy has been to buy abandoned buildings and rehabilitate or demolish them to avoid blight. There is no gate that keeps the community out," he said, referring to (literally) the open-door policy of campus buildings.

"We have a police department, with arrest power, that made 4,500 runs (on campus) last year and another 4,500 to surrounding neighborhoods."

Gov. John Engler recommended $220 million for WSU in the coming fiscal year, up 2.5 percent. The House raised it to $228 million, up 6.2 percent. Schwarz didn't say what figure he had in mind, but he wore a green and gold tie, signifying he earned his medical degree from WSU.

Adamany highlighted these areas of WSU's challenges:

• Its graduate enrollment (for master's, doctorates and law degrees) is 12,278 – third highest in the nation (behind New York University and Harvard) and ahead of U-M, Central Michigan and Michigan State.

• 74 percent of its alumni stay in Michigan, concentrated in the metropolitan Detroit area.

• Enrollment has dipped as the economy has boomed. Fewer laid-off persons want or need to work on advanced degrees; overtime keeps many workers from enrolling.

• Degree programs have been pared to 359 from 381 because of low degree rates. But WSU is unlikely to phase out too many programs with low enrollments because "our students are placebound and can't go to another university. One-third are married and raising children."

• 48 percent of undergraduates are taught by faculty, 40 percent by adjunct faculty and 13 percent (rounded off) by graduate students. "The adjunct faculty are deeply committed teachers," Adamany said, citing engineering professionals and 30 Detroit Symphony Orchestra musicians.

• Class sizes are about 27 for freshmen and sophomores and 22-23 for juniors and seniors – "as small as the elite universities," he said.

What's next for Adamany himself?

"One does not know," said the son of Lebanese immigrants. "Teaching in the law school. Research on campaign finance. Working in Washington."

Sheriffs looking for a few good driving habits

With school out soon and summer in full swing, the number of young drivers on the road will increase as they enjoy the warm summer days and nights.

Starting May 16, Wayne County Sheriff's Road Patrol will be on the lookout for young drivers exercising good driving habits and behavior.

Top drivers will be pulled over by Sheriffs deputies and rewarded with two tickets to a Detroit Tigers baseball game. "This program is to recognize responsible young people to use good judgment and practice safe driving principles," said Robert Ficano, Wayne County sheriff.

Good driving habits include:

• Extending courtesy to other motorists and pedestrians
• adhering to speed limit
• wearing a seat belt
• never drinking and driving
• keeping your eyes fixed on the road
• tuning out distractions.

Concern over the child who struggled through this grade...
Many parents and teachers are asking, "How will they ever make it next year?"
For kids with attention deficit, who avoid reading and hate paperwork, who forget their spelling and lose their place when they read...THERE IS HOPE!
Summer is fast approaching and many parents and teachers are worried about the child who needs help before school starts again in the fall. To them, this is an urgent reminder.
A child's vision is a key to learning, and is often overlooked. It may be the reason, or part of the reason, your child is smart in everything but school. "School vision screenings and basic eye exams do not include testing for prolonged focus needed for school. Simple 20/20 vision is not enough for success in school," states John P. Jacobi, O.D., F.C.O.V.D. "The child could have headaches, or even be seeing double, and still pass those tests."
If your child has been diagnosed with A.D.D. or is having learning problems, headaches, or avoids school work, a full vision and visual processing evaluation is needed. "After years of searching for answers, my child was finally diagnosed and successfully treated." Parents who have been through this struggle, "My child is anxious to go back to school. She now knows there is hope to improve instead of being so defeated all the time. My biggest regret is that we were not aware of this program sooner," shares another parent. "Thank you for giving Sara a better and brighter tomorrow."

For kids with A.D.D., poor readers and poor spellers..THERE IS HOPE!
Children with learning problems are seen daily at the office of Dr. Jacobi, specialist in children's vision. You may schedule a full vision and visual processing evaluation at (313) 525-8170. Dr. Jacobi will also be the guest speaker at P.A.V.E., Parents Active for Vision Education, on June 3, 7:00 p.m. at Livonia's Civic Center Library. He will discuss how to MAKE THIS SUMMER COUNT - Summer Enrichment activities for parents of struggling children.

ARTISTIC EXPRESSIONS

'Special' volunteers benefit from giving

Music therapist Margaret Hull of Birmingham beamed with pride as two of her students sang an Elvis tune at the Very Special Arts Festival at Wonderland Mall, Livonia May 3.

Brandon Walker and Marlon Smith, students at Herrington Elementary in Pontiac, didn't let their disabilities stand in the way of belting out "Blue Suede Shoes."

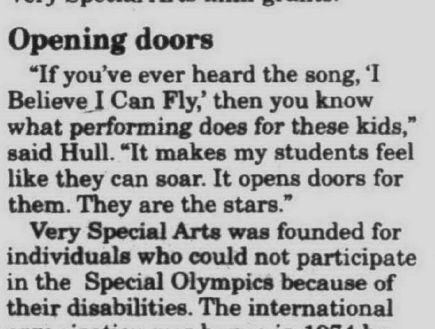

Presented by the Southeast Region Committee of Very Special Arts, the festival celebrates the power of arts to triumph over disabilities by showcasing the achievements of persons with hearing, sight, mobility, and developmental and emotional impairments. This year, 120 children and adults, strutted their stuff, putting to use skills learned in Very Special Arts programs, or programs funded by Very Special Arts mini-grants.

Opening doors

"If you've ever heard the song, 'I Believe I Can Fly,' then you know what performing does for these kids," said Hull. "It makes my students feel like they can soar. It opens doors for them. They are the stars."

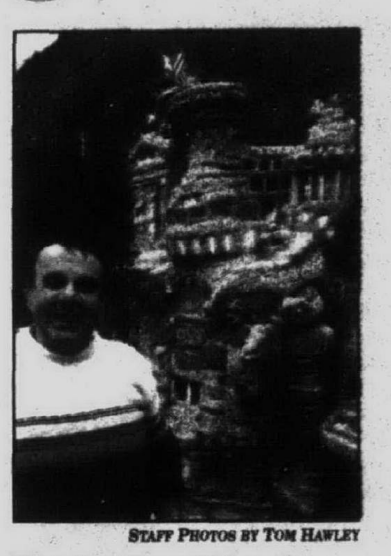

Very Special Arts was founded for individuals who could not participate in the Special Olympics because of their disabilities. The international organization was begun in 1974 by Jean Kennedy Smith with the goal of enriching the lives of the disabled by encouraging creativity through music, drama, dance, and visual arts programs. Very Special Arts mini-grants allowed the Schoolcraft Players of Redford; Fine Chimes, Farmington; students of Livonia Parents of the Visually Impaired; Wingert Center, Detroit, and FAR Conservatory in Birmingham, among others, to perform country line dances and songs like "Take Me Out to the Ball Game."

Visit Silvio Barile's secret garden

Spurred on by the disappointment of fans when the Red Wings lost the Stanley Cup last season, Silvio Barile set to work to create a cement version layer-by-layer on the back patio of his bakery in Redford.

The Cup, inscribed with names of hockey greats Gordie Howe, Delvecchio, Yzerman, Ciccarelli, Sawchuck, Federov and Constantinov, is but one of the sculptures in the garden behind Barile's home and bakery in Redford.

"The Stanley Cup is for the heart of the Red Wings fans, who go and support the Wings," said Barile. "When they lost the Cup, I said I'm going to make a Cup for them."

Barile, frequently referred to as one of the great folk artists of the era, gladly welcomes visitors to the garden, and his Redford Italian Bakery. The aroma of fresh baked bread and pizza, dished up by the slice, are pleasant distractions and another good reason to visit this treasure located right here in our own backyard.

Barile offers a free history lesson along with a tour of the sculptures of Julius Caesar, Romeo and Juliet, Romulus and Remus, St. Peter, Mt. Rushmore, Classic Roman architecture, Pope John Paul II, and Luciano Pavarotti.

Barile, 57, supplements historical perspective with his own philosophies. Many of the sculptures began as a hole in the ground. In his early work, Barile would create a negative for an iron framework before pouring Quikrete cement into the earthen-mold. Sergio DeGiusti, a well-known sculptor and long-time friend, helped Barile raise the works once completed with assistance from a tow truck and jacks lent by Rent-a-Jalopy in Detroit.

"The Stanley Cup he did was pretty amazing," said DeGiusti. "Silvio is one of the great folk artists in the same league as untrained visionaries like Simon Rodia (creator of the Watts Towers in California). I was just glad we didn't have to lift this one because he gradually built it layer-by-layer on the spot where it was to remain."

Barile started making his own toys, an art in itself, while living in a concentration camp with his mother and siblings during World War II. His love of Roman history; his native town of Ausonia, Italy; five children; and religion drive him along with his love for people.

Walking through the gardens and bakery, Barile reveals concepts leading to works based on the Alamo, and other historical events, which "we should never forget."

"Knowing the past, will help the future," Barile said as he began the tour talking about "Caesar Augustus, the father of the Romans who was well-respected because of his honorable ways."

Barile's work reflects his values. He started the sculpture garden 20 years ago "to give Italians an identity and to give America a little bit of old Roman wisdom like virtue and honor."

Those are the ideals Barile is building into his latest work "The Liberty Tower." Twin castle towers symbolize virtue and honor. Once finished, Barile will top the sculpture with 75-pound bells purchased at a garage sale.

"The main message is the effect they have on life," said Barile. "It's the message of art (that's important), the meaning that guides our own existence."

"Spirit of America" speaks about relationships between men and women by portraying the Statue of Liberty standing alongside a man. It's well worth thinking about in an age when divorce continues to thrive as an alternative to communication and compromise. A divorce four years ago left Barile with a great deal to say about the subject.

"I just want man and woman to get along better than they do," said Barile. "There's such misunderstanding in our relationships. We've forgotten how to love one another."

Sachs' resignation another ripple in waves of anxiety at DIA

BY FRANK PROVENZANO
STAFF WRITER

A day after he announced his resignation as director of the Detroit Institute of Arts, Samuel Sachs II was in New York to be introduced as the new director of the prestigious Frick Collection. For Sachs, who grew up and attended graduate school in New York, it was a return home. But for Founder Society members and DIA supporters, it was deja vu all over again.

Many expressed shock along with anxiety about the institute's uncertain future. The widely held view was that Sachs couldn't have chosen a worse moment for his sudden resignation since it came at a time when the DIA, once again, faces an impending financial and political crisis.

Dianne Abel, DIA associate director of development for volunteer services/special events, wondered about the financial viability of the museum. "It's a huge loss," said Abel, a Beverly Hills resident. "He's an excellent art historian and has provided a lot of guidance."

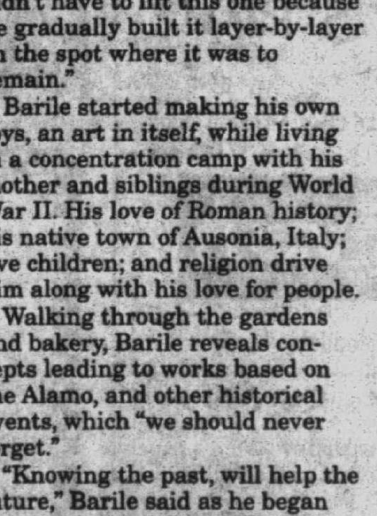

Yet there are signs that Sachs decision to leave wasn't just a case of responding to a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity, as he referred to the Frick position. While he conceded that he was first approached by a search committee for the Frick in early January, those close to Sachs cite the Detroit City Council's December of 1996 decision to table a proposal for a nonprofit corporation to operate the DIA as the decisive event that expedited his departure.

Currently, the DIA is run by a combination of city and Founders employees. The city-owned DIA and the Founders, a private organization that raises about 70 percent of the museum's $33 million budget, have been negotiating for the Society to assume full management of the DIA.

For the most part, the Founders Society is composed of suburban residents, many of whom have deep pockets and political connections. It's expected that hundreds of thousands of dollars could be saved annually by changing the administrative structure. Opponents to the plan, however, suspect that the Founders could usurp city control of the museum.

By late March, when the council reject-

City-suburb collaboration uneasy relationship

BY FRANK PROVENZANO
STAFF WRITER

While Samuel Sachs II's decision to resign is viewed formally by DIA staffers and trustees as a "wonderful opportunity," the museum's uncertain future reveals a greater dilemma facing the collaborative relationship between city and suburbs.

The question most commonly asked is: How can the DIA, often mentioned as one of the top five museums in the country, continually fall prey to funding problems and partisan political bickering? Many point to the state's 1991 debilitating budget cuts as setting an indifferent tone about the museum, while others contend that it's indicative of the uneasy city-suburbs relationship.

One source at the DIA contends that the Detroit City Council's decision to reject any plan for the Founders taking over the DIA is a move to defend its voice in the management of the museum. But that view also is seen as nearsighted, to say the least.

"I might not renew my Founders Society membership to send a message to the City Council that we're not self-centered suburbanites who want to run the DIA," said Sergio DeGiusti, a Redford sculptor whose work has been exhibited at the museum.

"I'm sick and tired of Eight Mile Road being seen as the Berlin Wall," said Detroit Councilman Clyde Cleveland, who supports the Founders assuming the management of the DIA. Cleveland along with council members Gil Hill and Sheila Cockrel voted in the minority to support the restructuring plan.

In fact, Cleveland pointed out that 93 percent of visitors to the museum are from metro suburbs and outstate. "We have a regional art institute that's located in the heart of the region – Detroit."

Challenges at the DIA

It may take up to two years to find a replacement for Sachs. The Detroit Arts Commission, appointed by Mayor Dennis Archer, is expected to conduct an extensive search for a new director.

Meanwhile, the museum's destiny will be in the hands of those left in Sachs' wake. "It's difficult to project if (Sachs' resignation) will affect the DIA's funding woes," said Maurice Parrish, DIA deputy director who will assume the director's role when Sachs leaves in September.

"In July 1998, there will be a $7 million to $8 million shortfall in the budget. It's important we begin very, very soon to work on a solution to that problem."

Simply put, the DIA has never recovered from reduced state funding. Since 1991, shortfalls caused by cuts in state support has amounted to a deficit of $32 million. Most of the deficit will be absorbed by the special Founders Society fund-raising campaign, Partnership for Renewal. The money from that campaign, however, will be exhausted in the coming fiscal year.

Considering current funding levels, the DIA has forecasted a $1.4 million budget deficit for next year. If that trend continues, the DIA faces either more cuts in its operating budget or will have to appeal for more private funding.

"People will be more reluctant if we have to embark on another public campaign to ask them again to come up with the needed funding," said Sachs.

A possible alternative, according to Councilman Cleveland, is a tri-county millage similar to the arrangement among the counties that support the Minneapolis Institute of Arts. For such a tax to be adopted, political leaders in Macomb, Oakland and Wayne would have to see the shared benefit of sustaining and further developing the DIA.

And that, of course, would take collaboration and a broader appreciation of one the region's most cherished cultural resources.

Linda Ann Chomin contributed to this story.

ed the perfunctory step of even soliciting requests for a proposal from nonprofits to run the DIA, Sachs was probably convinced that it was time to shop for a new home in New York.

"I feel like I did a great deal for the DIA, and maybe I pushed it as far as I possibly could," said Sachs.

Indeed, since assuming the director's position in 1985, Sachs has compiled a long list of accomplishments, including doubling the Founders Society membership to 46,000, increasing the museum's endowment from $20 million to $70 million, and spearheading a fund drive that has already netted $27 million with another year remaining. A rather successful tenure, most concede, during one of the most difficult financial circumstances in the museum's 112-year history.

But Susanne Hilberry, owner of the Hilberry Gallery in Birmingham, contends that it's been commonly known on the local art scene that Sachs has been looking for another position for years.

"It could be a blessing in disguise," said Hilberry, who worked at the DIA in the mid-1970s under the contemporary arts curator. "Maybe now that we're all focusing on 'What should we do,' there's an opportunity for us to begin to see the DIA as a resource we all need to take care of."

Even Sachs conceded that his resignation could draw attention to what he calls the precarious financial state of the museum. "Maybe this will be a catalytic event," said Sachs.

"I've gotten the sense that some people just don't understand the urgency that the DIA is facing a truly perilous future," he said. "To defer the action is not solving the issue."

By next July, the DIA may face an $8 million budget shortfall. And equally distressing, if the long-term funding picture doesn't get any better the DIA board of directors will draft a contingency plan to consider a restructured, scaled-down museum run on substantially less revenue.

To many, this sounds like 1991 when the state reduced funding from $16 million to $9 million, causing museum layoffs, reduced hours and a limited exhibit schedule.

At noon Wednesday, May 28, Sachs will deliver his state of the museum report at the Detroit Arts Commission meeting, held in the DIA boardroom. The meeting is open to the public, but no questions will be taken.

Linda Ann Chomin contributed to this story.

responds to Michelangelo's "David."

"David was not sensual like that," said Barile. "My David was just a shepherd with some goats and sheep. Michelangelo did not give David the weapons he needed to survive. I gave my David stones to protect himself and a water jug for when he gets thirsty."

Because Barile's cement sculptures weigh tons, only photos of the works have been exhibited at the Michigan Gallery, and "Patrimonio" exhibit at Wayne State University. Barile's work was also part of the 1993 Festival of Michigan Folk Life at Michigan State University Museum. That's where John Cicala met Barile. After receiving a frantic phone call in New York from the Michigan State University Museum, Cicala flew to the folk festival to serve as an interpreter of Barile's work. It seems some folks lacking knowledge of art traditions needed guidance. That intrigued Cicala who tracks and documents folk arts. After taking more than 500 photographs of Barile's work, and doing 20 to 30 hours of interviews, Cicala recently completed a Web page on Italian-American life and artists such as Barile for the Internet.

"Silvio is a simple baker who developed this style in a concentration camp during his childhood," said Cicala, who earned a doctorate in folklore and American studies from Indiana University. "Silvio's a folklorist, meaning that in order to understand his art, you have to understand the man and his life. It's not like Impressionism or Expressionism that has a certain set of rules.

"What attracts people to Silvio's work is the size, they're huge, and the complexity. You can sit and stare at it all day and see something new all the time."

An art exhibit, displayed off the Center Court, featured drawing, collage and portraits by Very Special Artists from Birmingham, Southfield, West Bloomfield, Farmington Hills, and the Pontiac-based Hope Network, S.E.

Heather Tiffany, communications and development coordinator for Hope Network, S.E. was grateful for the Very Special Arts mini-grant that allowed the nonprofit organization to initiate a therapeutic art program.

"Because of funding there was never an opportunity for the expression of this built-up talent that no one's ever seen before," said Tiffany.

Art activity tables placed at the back of the performing area provided participants and the public a chance to try their hand at creating visual art. Crayons and construction paper provided the key to open the doors to their imaginations.

There is nothing more rewarding than helping a child or adult with disabilities make art. The smile you receive in return, sends the heart soaring. For the last four years, I've gained more than I've given by volunteering to work in the art activities area at the Very Special Arts Festival at Wonderland Mall in Livonia.

During this time, I learned that we all have abilities when it comes to art, it's only a matter of degree. For some, the finished product is everything. For others, it's not the art you make that counts, but participating in the process to whatever degree.

Just ask Canton Township artist Gwen Dietrich. Last weekend, she volunteered to help children and adults with disabilities make birds from construction paper. Dietrich thinks artists as well as others could learn a lot by taking time out from their busy schedules to volunteer at the festival.

"Sharing an activity with a little blind girl made me realize how difficult and limited the world is for people with visual impairments," said Dietrich, "but my guidance and reassurance enriched her life. Unknowingly to her, she enriched mine."

BOOKS

'Life Without Bessie' sad, but worth living

On My Own at 107
By Sarah L. Delany with Amy Hill Hearth
(HarperSanFrancisco, $18)

BY KEELY WYGONIK
STAFF WRITER

Death and change are perhaps two of the hardest things to accept. They were for Miss Sadie Delany, who at 107 is learning to live without her sister, Dr. Bessie Delany, who died peacefully in her sleep Sept. 25, 1995, at the age of 104.

Only two years apart, the sisters spent a lifetime together. In 1993 they became celebrities, at age 104 and 102, when "Having Our Say: The Delany Sisters' First 100 years," written with Amy Hill Hearth, the New York Times reporter who discovered them in 1991, became a best-seller. The book adapted to stage, was a hit on Broadway, and is playing Music Hall Center for Performing Arts in Detroit.

"The Delany Sisters' Book of Everyday Wisdom," followed in 1994. "On My Own at 107: Reflections on Life Without Bessie," with Amy Hill Hearth, is Miss Sadie's joyful tribute to her sister. Watercolor illustrations of flowers from Bessie's garden by Brian M. Kotzky are sprinkled throughout.

"You'd think we were Siamese twins who couldn't live without each other! Well, I'm learning that I am a separate human being. For the first time I'm learning that," writes Miss Sadie.

"Life Without Bessie," like other Delany books, is witty, and full of good advice. Miss Sadie's struggle to pick up the pieces, and start living after the death of her sister, is one we'll all have to face.

"We all wish that things could stay the same, but they won't," she writes. "We all wish we could live forever, but we can't. I wonder what it is about life that makes us cling to it so, especially since the world can be so cruel sometimes."

Born on the campus of Saint Augustine's School (now College) in Raleigh, North Carolina, the 10 Delany children were protected, loved, taught to believe and trust in God, and "aim high."

Their father, Henry Beard Delany, was born into slavery, but became the first elected black Episcopal bishop in the United States. Nanny Logan Delany, their mother, was born free to a white man and his lifelong partner, a woman of color. Mr. Delany met his wife at Saint Augustine's, and they raised their children there.

All 10 Delanys graduated from Saint Augustine's, and worked their way through college. Bessie graduated in 1923 from Columbia University's School of Dental and Oral Surgery, becoming the second black woman licensed to practice dentistry in New York. Sadie, attended Pratt Institute and later Columbia University to pursue a teaching degree. She also earned a master's, at Columbia, and in 1925 was the first black woman to teach domestic science (home economics) on the high school level, in New York. They never married because in those days it meant giving up your career.

In Harlem the Delany siblings, who remained close all their lives, were part of an elite circle within the black community in the 1920s and 1930s. Later, the sisters moved to the Bronx, and to a two-story house in Mount Vernon, New York, in 1957 where Miss Sadie lives today. "Life Without Bessie," is not about dying, it's about learning to live without someone you love, while cherishing their memory.

Faith in God, exercise, eating lots of fruits and vegetables, no smoking, and taking vitamins, are some of the reasons the Delany Sisters give for their longevity. It also runs in their family.

She gives credit to her parents for the way she was raised. "We didn't have any money as a family, growing up, but we learned good habits, how to take care of ourselves properly."

At 107, Miss Sadie is looking forward, while treasuring the past.

"Somewhere along the line I made up my mind I'm going to live, Bessie. I guess I probably don't have that much longer on this Earth, but I may as well make the best of it ... Remember how I used to say, 'Life is short, and it's up to you to make it sweet? Well, I was wrong about the short part. But I still believe it's up to each person to make the best life, to keep trying, no matter what. A lot of it is how you look at it. A lot of it is attitude.

"Don't worry about me Sister Bessie. Child, I've got plans."

William D. Murrell, principal of Oak Park High School, and one of the Delany Sisters' nephews, visited Miss Sadie during Easter break. "She still takes her vitamins, and was alert, and talkative," he said. Miss Sadie will celebrate her 108th birthday Sept. 19.

"Having Our Say," will be presented 2 p.m. today at Music Hall Center for the Performing Arts, 350 Madison, Detroit. Tickets $23.50 to $38.50, are available at the box office (313) 963-2366.

Writer explores his love affair with basketball

To the Hoop: Seasons of a Basketball Life
By Ira Berkow
(Harper BasicBooks)

BY BRAD EMONS
STAFF WRITER

If you've ever played any amount of competitive hoop in your life, then Ira Berkow's "To The Hoop: Seasons of a Basketball Life," (Basic Books) is a mandatory assignment.

The New York Times sports columnist and Pulitzer Prize finalist weaves you through a course of basketball and life that a pick-up player should find appealing.

Even at the age of 56 and with a reconstructed knee, Berkow, continues to chase the "Holy Grail" when it comes to being a gym rat.

And he will go to just about any lengths to keep his dream alive.

The son of immigrant parents from Chicago's west side, Berkow recreates the book version of "Hoop Dreams," the award-winning documentary.

His journey begins on the playgrounds and continues through his trials and tribulations as an adolescent.

Unlike many scribes, Berkow can not only write about the game but also play it as well. He can relate to the struggles of playing both high school and college hoops, but he also gives the readers a truly insightful and humorous view, as well as the nuances, of becoming an effective pick-up player.

The opening chapter, titled "Home Courts," will leave you in stitches as he becomes attached to a cast of characters he encounters at the Vanderbilt YMCA gym in Manhatten.

Going on a nickname basis only, Berkow's most colorful writing and witty tales deal with the likes of Roach, Monster, Animal, Charlie Miron, Fuzz, Sly and J.J and Kenny Garcia.

He also exchanges elbows on the court with Oscar Robertson, tries to set up an elusive one-on-one match up with former New York governer Mario Cuomo, and copes with the meteoric improvement of his best friend and high school teammate Stuart Menaker, who ultimately surpasses Berkow as a player.

Berkow also trades basketball anedotes with the likes of the "Big O," Magic Johnson, Isiah Thomas, Red Holzman, Walt Frazier, Steve Kerr, Mark Aguirre and Michael Jordan.

The book covers the gamut when it comes to hoops, but it also inflicts a dose of reality as Berkow comes to grips and later reconciliation, after a lenghty period of estrangement from his younger brother Tom, who undergoes treatment for cancer.

Unfortunately, Berkow throws up a few bricks midway through the 285-page book when he exposes his life through his loves and marriages.

But like any good shooter, Berkow is able to gain his rhythm back in time and come back with a flurry in the fourth and decisive quarter.

He is to be commended, however, for being a straight shooter when it comes to revealing intimate details, not only about his family, but his own failings and shortcomings.

And Berkow is to be admired for accepting personal challenges when it comes to playing pick-up basketball.

A sparkling court on a beautiful day in Laguna Beach, Calif., turns nightmarish for Berkow, who becomes nearly haunted by experience.

But like any competitor, Berkow casts away his middle-aged doubts and makes a triumphant return to the scene of the crime.

He even gives this retired cager, now turned marathoner, food for thought about making a comeback, bad back and all.

Ira Berkow is a senior writer and sports columnist for the New York Times and author of over a dozen books, including Rockin' Steady: A Guide to Basketball and Cool (with Walt Frazier), along with the national best-seller Red: A Biography of Red Smith. He was born in Chicago in 1940 and graduated from Miami University of Ohio and from the Medill School of Journalism at Northwestern. He was recently named "New York's Best Sportswriter" by New York Magazine. He lives with his wife, Dolly, of New York City.

Mountain bike guide takes you to the best Michigan trails

Mountain Biking Michigan: The Best Trails in Southern Michigan
by Dwain Abramowski and Sandra Davison (Pegg Legg Publications, Thunder Bay Press, $13.95)

BY HUGH GALLAGHER
STAFF WRITER

The Thunder Bay Press series of bicycle books goes off road again for this excellent guide to the best places to splash, jump, leap, climb, twist and turn on your mountain bike in southern Michigan.

The Thunder Bay books are invaluable to anyone who bicycles. Two books by Karen Gentry cover the best road trips in the western and eastern Lower Peninsula (with humorous stops at several eating places) and Mike Terrell covers off road mountain bike trails in the northern Lower Peninsula.

This new book is perfect for choosing a weekend or late afternoon ride close to home. Abramowski and Davison give some tips on how and when to ride and then give riders a choice of 41 exciting trail systems.

The authors rate the trails from easy to strenuous, tell which trails are good for family outings and which are better for hard core stump jumpers. The book also includes good directions on how to get to the trails, photos, detailed maps of the trails, distances and a twists and turns description of each trail. You know what you're getting into when you read these guide books.

Best of all, these trails are close to home. The authors describe the trail system at Bald Mountain as the most scenic in Oakland County, offering more than 15 miles "past a dozen small lakes, marshy ponds and over gurgling Spring Creek." Other near to home trails include Addison Oaks, Ortonville, Maybury, Highland and Pontiac Lake.

For Pontiac Lake the writers give fair warning: "The route is noted for it roots and rocks. Most riders will find the network challenging in its obstacles and speed. Pay attention or such obstacles can hurt you. There are several notable climbs; some are steep, some are loose and some are both loose and steep. Some of the hills have earned nicknames like Little Puke, so time your pre-ride meals." Despite all this the writers inform us that the trail is so popular that on weekends it's often packed with riders by mid-morning.

The book also covers areas in western and central Michigan perfect for weekend getaways. The book covers the area south of the Pentwater-Tawas line.

Every bike pack in Michigan should have one of these guides along for the ride.

Final Days: Visitors have until May 25 to view this 15th century Austrian saddle in the Detroit Institute of Arts "Images in Ivory: Precious Objects of the Gothic Age" exhibition.

EXHIBITION EXTENDED

The Detroit Institute of Arts has extended the "Images in Ivory: Precious Objects of the Gothic Age" exhibition through Sunday, May 25 at the museum, 5200 Woodward Avenue in Detroit.

Admission is $5 adults; $2 children/students; Founders Society members, free, and includes museum admission and a Acoustiguide recorded tour narrated by Susan Stamberg, National Public Radio special correspondent. The exhibit is free on Wednesdays with a donation for museum admission.

According to exhibition curator Peter Barnet, "visitors have expressed amazement at the extraordinary quality of carving on such small ivory figures. And people seem to particularly enjoy experiencing daily life in the Gothic Age represented in each work- from how people prayed to how they combed their hair."

"Images in Ivory" features 100 examples of medieval ivory carving in a setting that includes gothic arches and windows, recordings of period music and a reading room. Many of the works were loaned by the world's greatest museums including the Louvre in Paris; Victoria & Albert Museum, London, and Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City. The exhibit will travel to only one other site, the Walters Art Gallery in Baltimore (June 22 to Aug. 31), before the objects are returned to the various lending institutions.

DIA hours are 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Wednesday through Friday, and until 5 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. Call (313) 833-7900.

CHORAL AUDITIONS

The University Musical Society Choral Union will hold auditions 7-10 p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday, May 27-28; 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday, May 31, and 1-6 p.m. Sunday, June 1. Other dates and times available by appointment.

The 175-voice Choral Union, under conductor Thomas Sheets, performs regularly with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, Toledo Symphony and other major orchestras, and presents chamber music with the 24-voice Chamber Chorale.

The 1997-98 season includes performances of Handel's "Messiah," Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess," Mendelssohn's "Elijah," and Elgar's "Dream of Gerontius." A special concert scheduled for Aug. 2 is a presentation of "Carmina Burana" by the Choral Union and the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, under conductor Neeme Jarvi, at the Meadow Brook Music Festival in Rochester.

Although based in Ann Arbor, the Choral Union consists of members from all over the southeast Michigan area including Plymouth.

RUMMAGE SALE

The Plymouth Community Arts Council will hold a rummage sale 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Thursday and Friday, May 29-30 inside the arts center located at 774 North Sheldon Road in Plymouth.

"We'll have lots of treasures and the proceeds will help fund children's art programs in the schools," said Joanne Hulce, Plymouth Community Arts Council board member. "We always need to update our materials and buy new portfolios for the Art Volunteer program which takes art to Plymouth and Canton elementary, junior and high schools."

The arts council is still looking for rummage sale donations of everything except clothing. Volunteers are also needed to work before, during and after the sale.

"We could always use their help," said Hulce.

For more information about the sale or to volunteer your time, call the arts council at (313) 416-4ART.

THROUGH THE LOOKING GLASS

A new exhibition by sculptor Fred Sandback opened May 17 at the University of Michigan Museum of Art, 525 South State Street, Ann Arbor, (313) 764-0395. Admission is free.

Most people think of sculpture as being created from clay, metal or wood. But for Sandback, acrylic yarn is the sculptural equivalent of #2 pencil. With a spectrum of colored yarn pulled taut from ceiling to floor, Sandback carves huge columns and room-sized structures from ordinary space. His simple strands become the edges of imaginary planes and volumes- a bristling geometry nearly transparent and weightless.

Sandback's work confounds expectations and opens minds to a new way of seeing. Using line alone, Sandback induces viewers to experience the space anew, to mentally or physically cross through the diaphanous plane much as Alice went through the looking glass.

Sandback tackled the U-M museum's Apse this spring, tying and tethering string to the architectural members of this usually bold, bright and busy space, changing it into something new and mysterious.

The exhibition continues through Sept. 28. Hours are 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday to Saturday, until 9 p.m. Thursday, and noon to 5 p.m. Sunday.

SHOW CANCELED

The Friends of Nankin Mills regrets to announce their annual "Spring Elegance" arts and craft show scheduled Sunday, June 1 in Edward Hines Park will not be held.

The annual show raised funds for the restoration of Nankin Mills and the addition of a nature center, tentatively scheduled for completion in 18 months.

"With the number of craft shows out there at this time of year, it was difficult to get crafters," said Denise Johnston, Friends president. "We may do the show in fall 1998."

In the meantime, the Friends are looking at different ways to raise funds. Their annual wine and cheese reception will still be held the last Wednesday in September.

"We're always looking for volunteers whether it's an artist who might want to arrange flowers at the wine and cheese reception, or just help out in general," said Johnston.

For more information about the Friends of Nankin Mills, call Johnston at (313) 261-3633, or Kathy Myers (313) 421-7213.

YOUNG PIANIST HONORED

Joshua H. Cullen was one of three citizens honored by Wayne County Executive Edward H. McNamara during a breakfast May 16 at Burton Manor.

Nearly 2,000 people attended the Winning Ways Awards, a celebration of community spirit to honor extraordinary citizens of Wayne County. The sense of purpose and dedication of these three citizens has led to the progress of Wayne County and the enrichment of the lives of the people who live there.

Cullen began studying piano at five. At age eight, he made his debut performing with the Livonia Symphony Orchestra. Now 12, Cullen has performed in concert halls as far away as Italy, Vienna, Moscow, and Prague. Blessed with determination most adults only dream of, he remains levelheaded and upbeat, an example of what others can achieve through hard work.

William Clay Ford, Jr. and Margaret Piper were also honored with awards.

EXPERIENCING JAZZ

Albion College student Julie P. White is gaining experience in jazz performance by playing with the College's Jazz Ensemble.

White, a junior majoring in biology, is the daughter of James and Patricia White of Westland and a graduate of Churchill High School in Livonia.

The Jazz Ensemble presents several concerts throughout the year, as well as performing during the Homecoming0 Collage Concert and spring Children's Concert. "It's a valuable opportunity for students to try challenging music and use their musical talents in different ways," said department chair Myron McReynolds, who directs the Ensemble.

Painter does mural justice at new courthouse

BY FRANK PROVENZANO
STAFF WRITER

Two carpenters, carrying a long wooden plank, share a good laugh as they pass the scaffold where painter Robert Schefman is working. Atop a platform about six feet above the sawdust-laden marble tile, he holds a fistful of brushes in one hand, and a single brush in the other.

Schefman of West Bloomfield is painting delicate facial lines and skin tones of the people included in his massive mural in the lobby of the newly constructed 19th District Court in Dearborn.

"Watch out," yelled one carpenter, nodding in the direction of the scaffold.

"Hey, so he adds an extra wrinkle," laughed the other carpenter, feigning like he's shaking the ladder. "What's the big deal?"

Schefman smiled boyishly. "It's combat around here."

Then, as if the carpentry troops had taken up arms there was a sudden cacophony of drills, saws, hammering and monosyllabic yelling. The abrasive noise mingled in peculiar harmony with the country music reverberating through the hallways.

It's a setting closer to painting along with the Three Stooges than contemplating a lasting allegory for the halls of justice. Yet Schefman perseveres.

While his impressive figurative paintings have been critical successes over the last 10 years, Schefman's artistry is by no means limited to the canvas. If there's an embodiment of a blood and guts, hell-bent for his art artist, he's it.

"He doesn't just attack a canvas, he becomes immersed in it," said Darlene Carroll, director of the Lemberg Gallery in Birmingham, which represents Schefman. "He has a strong following. Part of that is because he grew up in the area, but his work appeals anywhere."

Widely known for his paintings that offer contemporary interpretations of classic Greek myths, Schefman's obsession for his subjects and mastery of technique place him among the finest painters working in the realistic tradition. At 44, he no longer thinks in terms of a "big break" or a watershed exhibit.

"It's a building process," he said. "You just keep working at it. If the public responds, that's wonderful. If not, you still go on with your work."

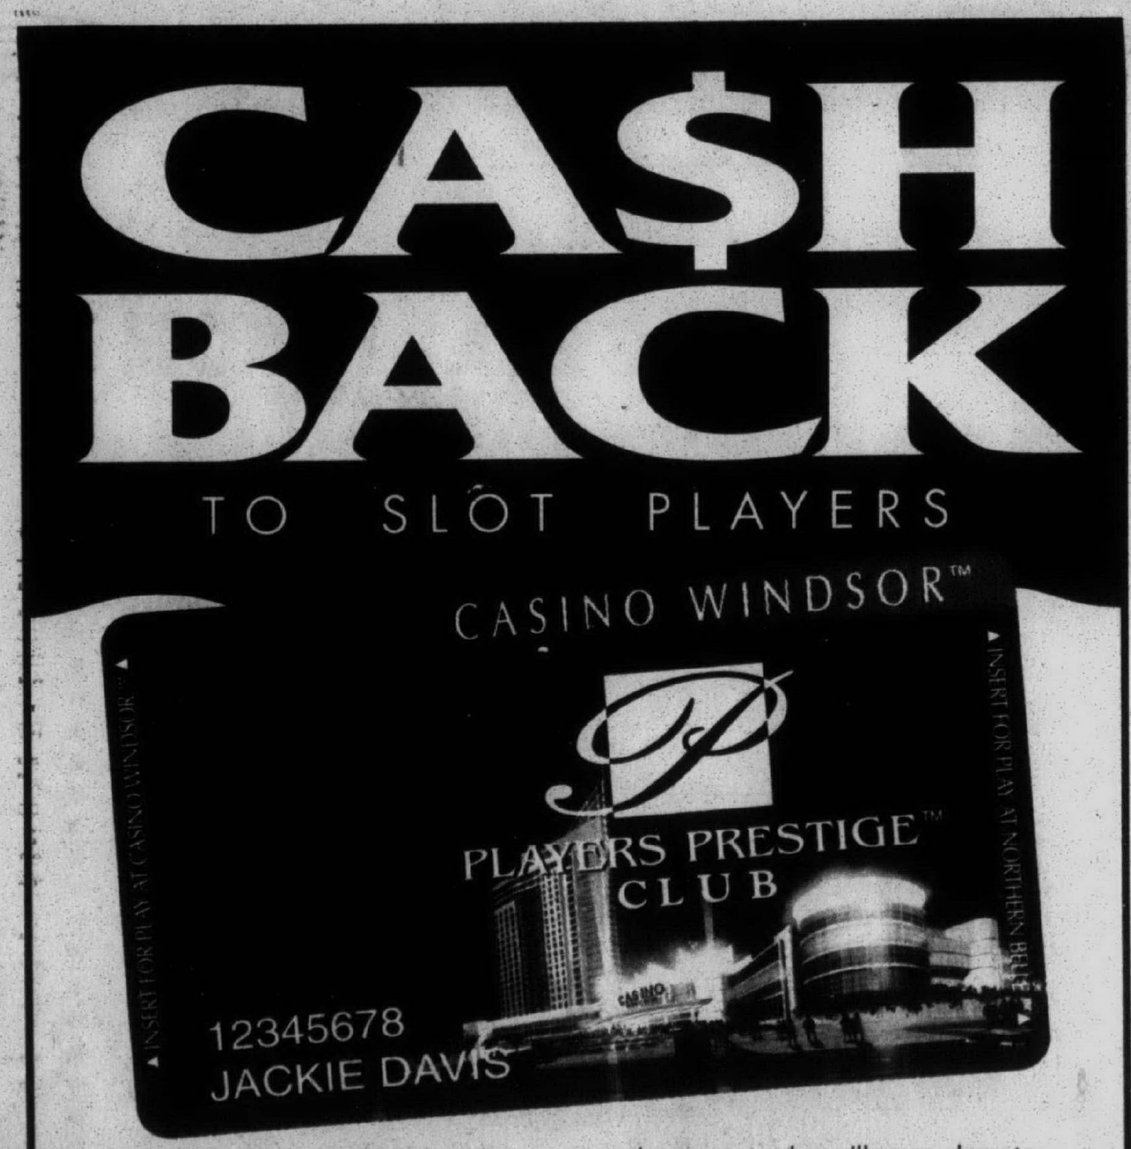

A classic story of equality

When architects suggested that perhaps a painting could fill the 48-foot wall in the 19th District Court entrance, Chief District Court Judge William Runco realized it was the ideal place for "meaningful art." Runco is overseeing the construction of the $8 million expanded court building expected to add 35,000 square feet to one of the busiest courts in the state.

"Public buildings should have some enduring monument," said Runco. "People will come to the court and be in awe looking at the expressions of the people in the mural. They look as if they could've been at the signing of Declaration of Independence."

Whenever art is created for a public place, the most often-asked question is: What will be appropriate? Unlike many artists who either appeal to the lowest common denominator or ignore mainstream sensibilities, Schefman's view is refreshingly realistic without being compromising.

"In 'public art,' you present an experience for everyone," he said. That "open-ended experience" is enhanced by Schefman's design for the curved mural wall, which includes 30 faces of Dearborn residents as characters participating in a story about the citizenry role in the due process of law. On one side are those engaged in the discussion about the nature of law. On the other side are the "common people" who sit in judgment of their fellow citizens.

TRAVEL

Tour host believes in knowing Italy before you go

BY HUGH GALLAGHER
STAFF WRITER

Anria Del Pizzo believes in careful preparation.

As a teacher of Italian, Del Pizzo has been spreading the word on Italian culture for 20 years. Now she is introducing people to Italy first hand, by leading tour groups. But before they go, Del Pizzo makes sure they are prepared to understand what they see.

She prepares a study guide for her tourists (Amici di Anria, Friends of Anria). She gives lectures, shows slides, gives behind the scenes information.

A Del Pizzo study guide includes more than an itinerary. The guide includes an explanation of the European Economic Community, a metric conversion table, a summary of Italian history, diagrams of famous buildings, articles on local cuisine and pertinent maps.

"I try to make visuals, so they know where everything is. I try to make you feel Italy in your soul," she said.

Del Pizzo, of Northville, already has Italy in her soul. She teaches privates Italian classes, has taught Italian at Wayne State, Oakland Community College and is president of the Michigan Chapter of the American Association of Teachers of Italians.

Her parents were born in Italy and as a child she often returned to Italy and attended school there. She attended the University of Florence and her son Marco attended the University of Pisa and her other son, Dante, will be attending Pisa this summer.

Her husband, Ferdinando, is also of Italian descent and helps with the study program by preparing Italian meals for the group at the monthly meetings held before the trips.

Kate Shishkovsky of Livonia said those meetings made fast friends of the travelers and the study guides "helped an awful lot" in increasing understanding of what the travelers would see.

"Those monthly meetings we had were fun but we also had interesting things to learn," she said.

This year, Del Pizzo is leading two trips to Italy. The first, Aug. 26 to Sept. 4, will explore Venice, Milan, Verona, Portofino and Cinque Terra. The highlight will be a production of Verdi's "Rigoletto" at the Roman Amphitheatre in Verona and side trips to "Romeo and Juliet" sites in the city. A fall trip, Sept. 29 to Oct. 9, will include Milan, Venice and the Italian Riviera.

Her "Know Before You Go" sessions begin at 7 p.m. Tuesday. Group size is limited to 12. For information, call Del Pizzo at (810)474-4519.

Past trips over the last three years have included Rome, Florence and Milan.

"My favorite city is Florence. It's my home city but also it has so much art and history," she said.

The first year she led a group, her cousin in Florence, Alberta Sassetti, invited everyone to dinner for an Italian feast. The group sampled local cuisine and a variety of Italian wines.

Del Pizzo tries to find these special, human touches and avoids the obvious tourist destinations, unless they are absolute musts. Then she gives her touring friends an insider's view.

"In Venice everybody rides the gondolas, but we learn about the history of gondolas," she said. "Venice is a water city, but we learn why and how."

Each student learns some Italian, so they can get by.

"I teach my students buzz phrases. By using 'Where is ...' They can look up in the dictinary and find where they want to go," she said.

"Italians appreciate anyone who tries to speak the language and they try to help."

For the trip to Verona, travelers will learn about opera, Roman amphitheatres and the legend of Romeo and Juliet.

Del Pizzo said the Verona Amphitheatre is as large as the Roman Coliseum and still in tact. Each evening before the opera, everyone lights a candle.

"Verona is beautiful, known for its pink marble, there is a pink tinge over the whole city," Del Pizzo said.

Romeo and Juliet sights will include the balcony, Juliet's home and her tomb.

Those who have traveled with Del Pizzo are most grateful for the friendships they've forged.

"Our experience in going to Italy with Anria's group was wonderful. We all became fast friends and the friendship has continued for almost two years. We have three or four dinners together a year in one of our homes," write Donna and Paul Trupiano of Dearborn. "The trip itself was outstanding. Italy is a wonderful country: the people, culture, art, beauty are intriguing. For us, we also visited family and that was a most precious gift."

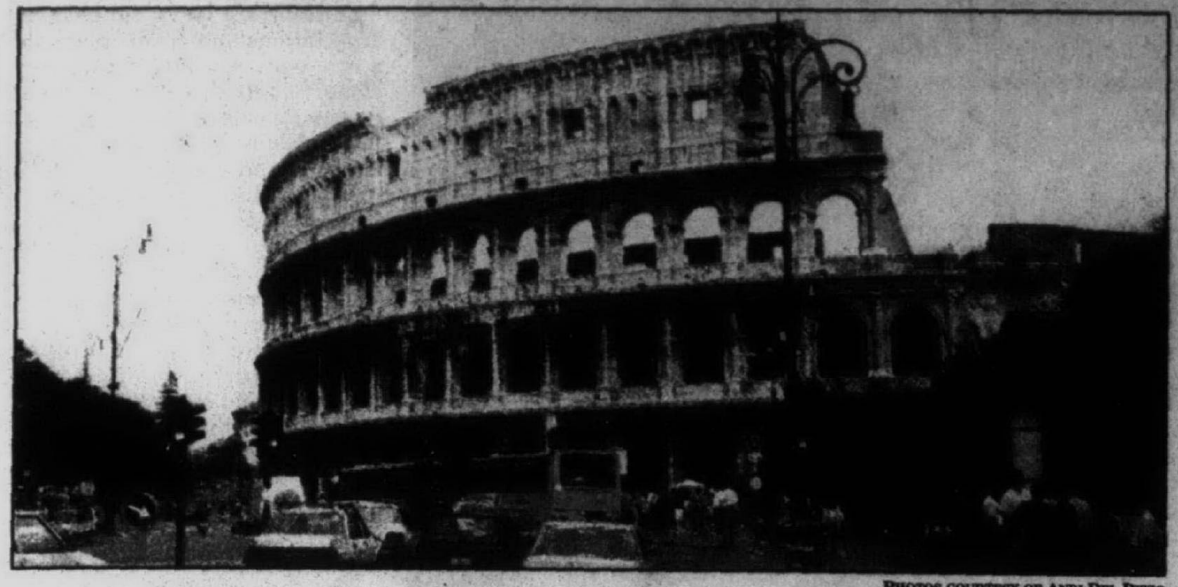

Shishkovsky also enjoyed the camaraderie.

"I like art and art history and I just thought Rome was fabulous," said Shishkovsky. She said the highlights for her, in addition to the friendships she made, were St. Peter's Bascilica and the Parthenon in Rome.

Daniel Lenzi of Novi discovered that the Lenzi family of Florence has a long and noble tradition. Del Pizzo said he spent hours researching the history of the family, though he still isn't certain that he is related to these Lenzis.

Lenzi and his wife, Andrea, also sent their recommendation: "We never expected that we would form lasting friendships with the others on our trip to Italy. We are sure that it was mainly due to the small size of the group. Also, the sessions we had at Anria's house prior to leaving helped us get acquainted with the others.

"Then top it all off by sharing a special experience like our trip to Rome and Florence which solidified our friendship with the others. We have had five or six dinners together over the past year and a half. This has been a real bonus."

Return to Yesteryear on a national treasure

(NAPS) – Nothing can compare to the experience of lazily drifting past sleepy river towns aboard a luxurious steamboat that Mark Twain would have been proud to serve on as a captain.

From the moment you step aboard the legendary Delta Queen, you enter a world far removed from today's fast-paced society. Time seems suspended on the steamboat, this year celebrating her 70th birthday and her 50th anniversary on America's heartland rivers.

Designated as a National Historic Landmark, the Delta Queen is a one-of-a-kind star-spangled slice of Americana, featuring Tiffany-style stained glass windows, gleaming brass fittings and rich polished wood.

The Delta Queen features elegant public areas and a dramatic grand staircase, crowned by an elegant crystal chandelier. Cabins and staterooms continue the theme of old-fashioned elegance, making a river voyage as comfortable as a stay at a Victorian bed-and-breakfast.

Free airfare is available as an early booking bonus for most cruises reserved and deposited eight months before departure.

For more information on the Delta Queen or her sister steamboats Mississippi Queen and American Queen, call your travel agent or The Delta Queen Steamboat Co. at 800/214-2589.

Concern focuses on PCEP

BY M.B. DILLON

Staff at Plymouth-Canton Educational Park are selling students short by failing to consistently enforce the rules.

That's the contention of a growing number of individuals troubled by the fact that students are allowed to congregate outside in groups of up to 100 or more to smoke; leave campus; miss up to eight classes before parents are notified; eat in stairwells and hallways; violate the dress code; swear; use undue familiarity with each other; loiter and litter.

Boys' bathrooms at Canton and Salem High schools lack toilet paper and soap; and frequently paper towels, says a parent. Adults using classrooms in the evening - particularly for CPR instruction - say getting down on the floor to practice on dummies is most unpleasant because of spilled pop that attracts fruit flies and leaves floors sticky and dirty.

School officials began hearing such complaints last year from Lynn Gregg, an assistant principal at John Glenn High School whose son attends Plymouth's Central Middle School. He's considering sending his son to a private school unless things improve.

Recently, special education teacher Ken Smith has addressed the board of education about the inconsistent enforcement of the student code, saying "I don't understand why we let a lack of discipline affect the learning of our youth.

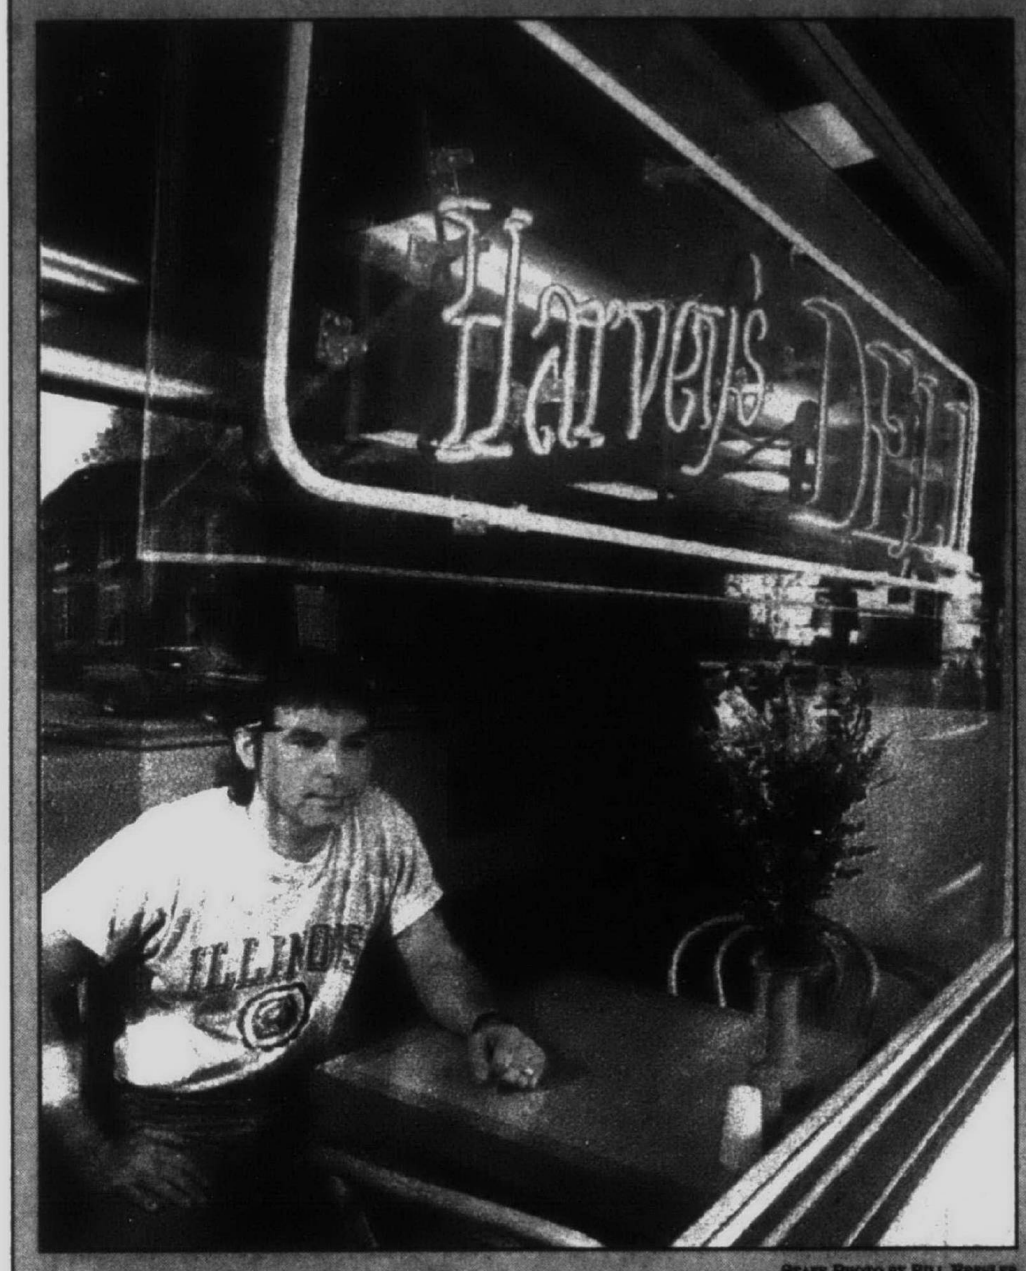

"There are good students here; I've never met a bad kid. Our teachers are very good; so are our goals and curriculum," said Smith, a 30-year teacher involved with several youth programs including Canton's "Character Counts."

Among the things that most bother Smith is the lax attendance policy, which says parents will be informed "when a student accumulates eight total absences."

"It's a little late. By that time, students have an academic problem, but it's accepted," he said. The PCEP handbook says teachers should - not

City sign enforcement: A help or a hindrance?

BY KEVIN BROWN
STAFF WRITER

While some Old Village business people are fuming over strict enforcement of the city's sign ordinance, some say they appreciate efforts to upgrade the look of the north side of town.

"I understand where they're coming from, they want to clean it up - sometimes people take advantage of the situation," said Greg Huddas, owner of Yer Grampa's Moustache on Liberty Street.

Huddas said he's been cited before, not over signs, but for boats parked behind his business and for a lawn mower left out.

"I'm the only one that cut my grass here for 20 years and they give me a ticket," he joked.

For signs, he said, "I think it is good. Some of them get ridiculous."

Vorva files lawsuit for school bond re-election

■ A challenge to the Plymouth-Canton Community Schools' bond election could mean a setback for construction of new schools.

BY M.B. DILLON
STAFF WRITER

A legal challenge of Plymouth-Canton Community Schools' special election could mean a delay in the construction of new schools; bus and computer purchases; and capital improvements in the district, according to John Birchler, the schools' executive director for business and operations.

Jerry Vorva, former state representative and a Plymouth City Commission candidate, filed a complaint in Wayne County Circuit Court Wednesday, asking for a re-election.

By a 96-vote margin, voters approved a 25-year, $79.7 million bond issue March 22.

The suit was filed on behalf of Vorva and the 716 voters whose ballots weren't counted due to errors with the district's new touch-screen voting machines.

A hearing is set for May 30 before Judge James Rashid.

Vorva, represented by Plymouth attorney Stephen Boak, decided to file after the local board of canvassers tested the voting machines and determined there was no malfunction or defect in the equipment.

The three-count complaint contends that the district used the machines without the required state authority; that the "voting system prevented or inhibited a person from casting a valid ballot; and that the denial of "equal protection under the law...resulted in the denial of a vote to 716 voters."

The action "could mean schools won't be built as soon as we'd hoped," said Birchler. "If we end up with court action, I have no idea how long it will take. There's certainly a possibility it could delay the opening of the schools, depending on how long it would be tied up."

Despite the pending suit, the school board authorized the sale of building and site bonds Tuesday night.

"They were very brave doing that," said Boak. "I don't know why there is this seeming rush to spend the taxpayers' money when there may not be authorization to do so.

"I would assume that just because they got authority Tuesday night that they didn't run out Wednesday and start selling bonds. They were aware that this lawsuit was in the offing. I would not think that our public trustees would look upon the spending of money so lightly that they would jeopardize it while this suit is pending."

Birchler said the district "hasn't been served with anything, to my knowledge. Actually taking bids on the bonds would not have happened until sometime in June. Work

Landfill dumps on city

BY KEVIN BROWN
STAFF WRITER

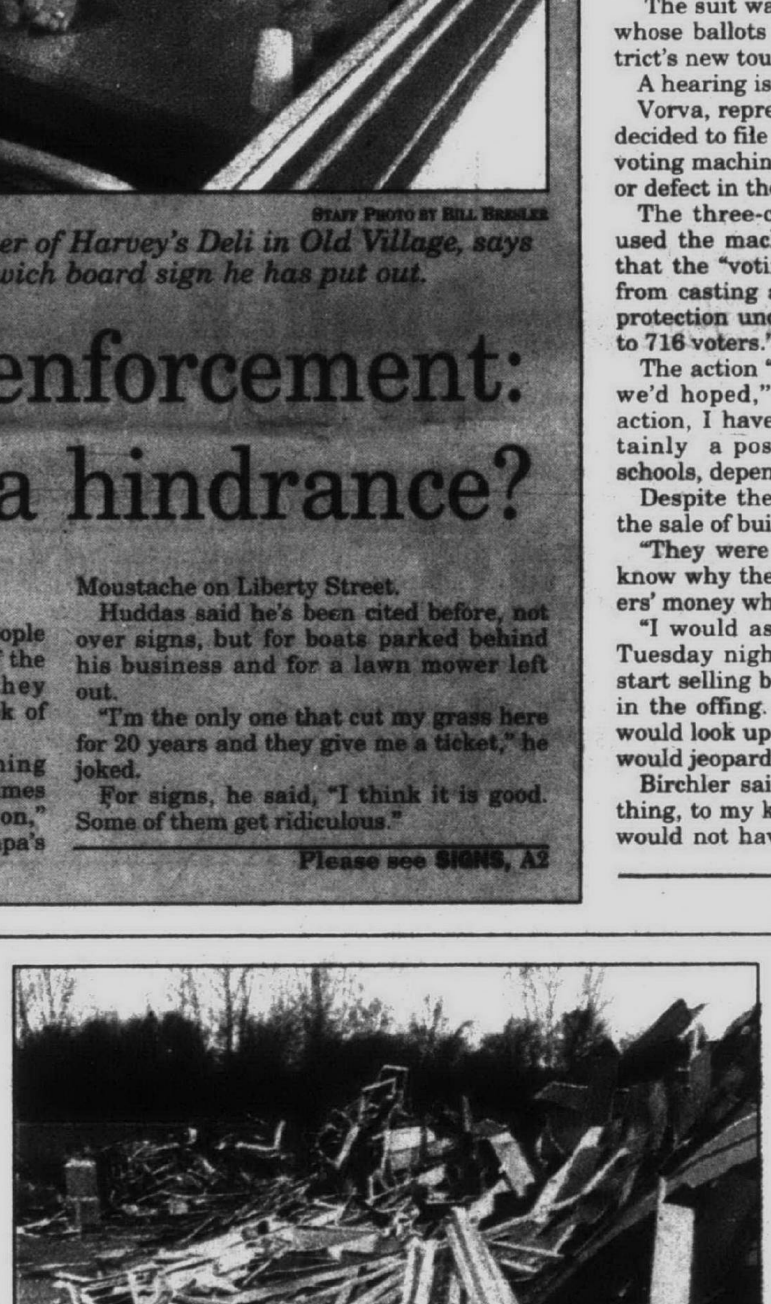

If you think old graveyards are scary, consider the specter posed by old landfills.

At a special meeting Thursday, the city of Plymouth's legal staff presented to city commissioners the possibility the city could be sued to help pay cleanup costs for the former Nankin dump near Warren and Newburgh roads in Westland.

What's scary is that the city government will likely pay thousands of dollars to head off an even larger settlement - and there's no hard evidence that city trash was ever dumped there.

Friends climb the scrap heap together

BY RENEE SKOGLUND
SPECIAL WRITER

They were immigrants - Jews from Eastern Europe and Italians - poor but unafraid of hard work. With little more than a horse-drawn cart or a battered pick-up truck, they canvassed the cities and countryside for scrap metal.

Today, their legacy, a network of scrap metal companies across America, supplies the raw material - the iron, steel, copper, aluminum and zinc - that fuels the industrial economy.

Hugh Goldsmith, 33, of Ann Arbor, is a third-generation scrap metal dealer on both sides of his family. He and his partner of 15 years, Doug Billingsley, own Haggerty Metals in Plymouth Township. About a third of the yard's 14 acres is covered with scrap.

What is one man's vision is another's nightmare. Neighbors complain about the "mess."

"It's noisy and there are piles of metal here. I really don't know any other way to do that," said Goldsmith, a mild-mannered Russian history major.

Yet, there is a surrealistic appeal to the scrap yard: Mountains of aluminum

Barbecue ban is put on ice pending rewrite

BY KEVIN BROWN
STAFF WRITER

A barbecue grill ban for some Plymouth Township apartment and condo dwellers was put on hold by township trustees on Tuesday.

Specifically, the new ordinance would prohibit barbecue grills on apartment and condominium patios - if there is a patio or cantilever or overhang above that deck or patio on which the grill sets.

Township trustees on Tuesday were presented with the second reading of a 1996 BOCA Fire Prevention Code ordinance. The ban on patio grills was among provisions of the upgraded fire code.

But instead of passing the ordinance, trustees sent it back to Township Attorney Tim Cronin for revision. Some trustees maintained language prohibiting apartment or multi-dwelling grills, when there is a overhang above, was not clear.

The proposed ordinance prohibited grills "outside a building or portion thereof containing more than a single dwelling unit where the heat or flame from the combustion shall be transmitted or rise from one dwelling unit underneath, below or beneath an outcropping, balcony or porch of another dwelling unit."

Trustee K.C. Mueller said the ordinance language could state that such grills are prohibited when units are stacked vertically.

Trustee Ron Griffith asked fellow trustees if they would support removing this part of the revised ordinance. "We should let apartment owners deal with individual tenants as they see fit," he said.

Fire Chief Larry Groth responded, "I'm approaching this from a fire prevention standpoint." He said that in recent months, grill fires at apartments destroyed 12 apartment units in Sterling Heights and caused the evacuation of residents of a Canton complex.

But Griffith said he was concerned about creating ordinances "that start chasing grills around town."

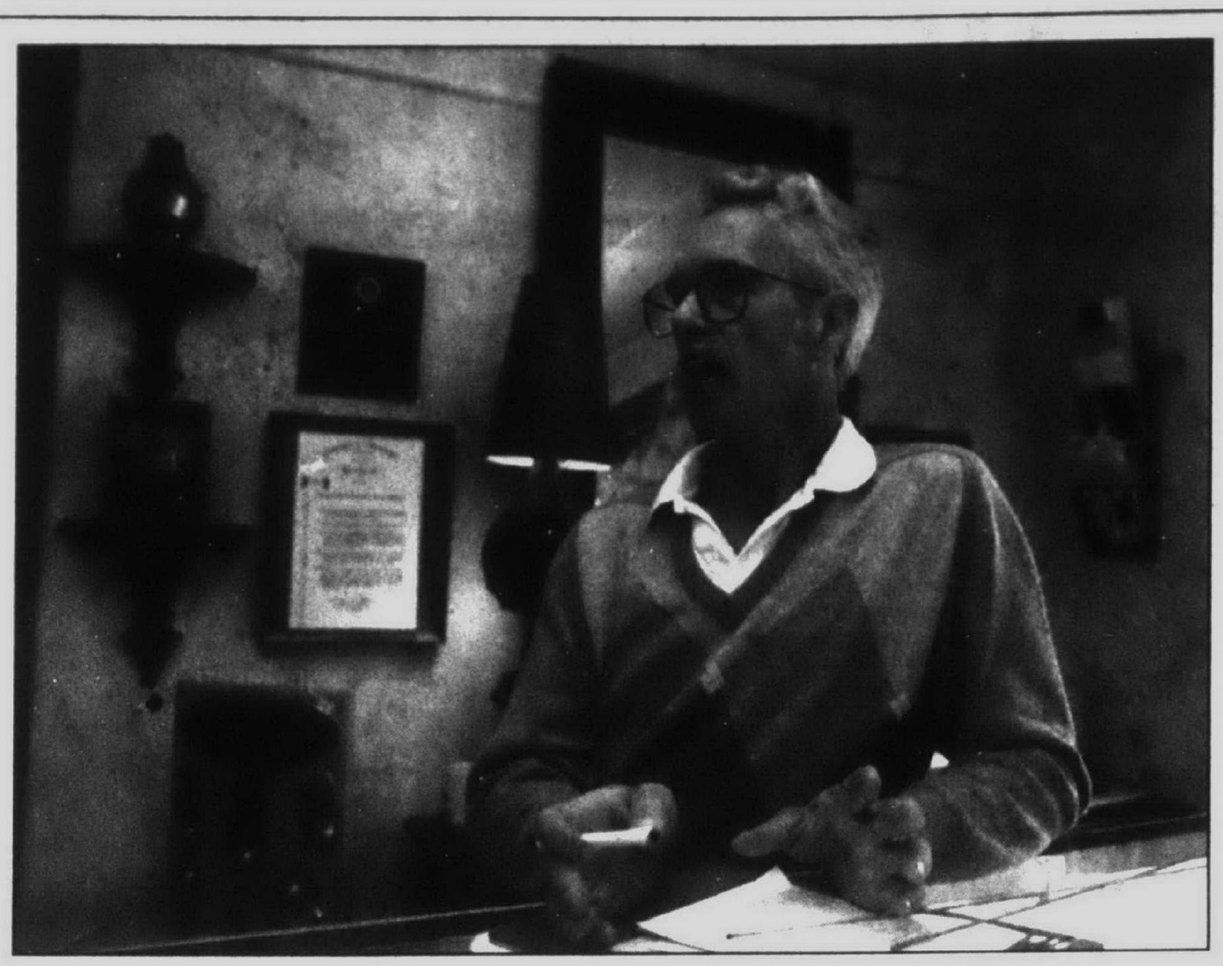

"I have a fear you're going to push these people indoors, you're not really going to achieve your purpose," he said.

His motion to delete the language from the proposed ordinance was defeated, as trustee Charles Curmi was the lone trustee joining him in supporting the motion.

"I agree with the fire chief, we need to support the owners of these apartment buildings," Mueller said.

Supervisor Kathleen Keen McCarthy said a 20-year township apartment dweller called her to thank officials for considering the ordinance.

By opting to restart the approval process for the revised ordinance, the quickest it could become effective would be early summer.

Warned: Paul Bezaire, owner of of Piccadilly's House and Garden on Mill, said he was warned about a sign he put up at his store. He removed the sign and was not cited. Merchants in Old Village had varied opinions about the city's sign ordinance and enforcement.

"I think the majority have been sandwich signs," said Kim Guenther, owner of the Lower Town Grill. "I don't know if they hurt anything, as long as they're removed at night."

Guenther said he hadn't been cited. "We've kept to the rules and regulations," he said.

"I'm more concerned about the cost of fish."

Dan Sarb, owner of Harvey's Old Village Deli on Mill, said he hasn't been cited for putting out a sandwich board sign Saturday mornings, but some of his neighbors have.

"Personally I don't want everyone throwing every kind of junk sign out there, but the city should show them some sort of guidelines."

"The city and the businesses should get together and come up with some reasonable guidelines," Sarb said, adding warnings should be issued before tickets are written.

Paul Bezaire, owner of Piccadilly's House And Garden on Mill, said after he was warned about a banner that violated the ordinance, he took it down and wasn't cited.

"If the signs look like they're professionally made, fine, if they're schlocky, they should keep them down," he said.

"This is not right. We're trying to make a living," said Bill Haio, owner of Bill's Market on Mill.

"I have a different business than other people do, it's a food business. The way they treated me is very bad. He (the city ordinance officer) put his finger right in my face, I had a neon sign by the register, he said if you don't remove it I'm going to ticket you."

"My uncle was here seven years, and said 'I never heard nothing," Haio continued. "I've been here almost a year and a half, and they come in screaming in my face."

"I personally think they should give us the chance to put up temporary signs, temporary signs is not bad business," Haio said.

"How come in the township everyone has signs on their windows, and downtown? This is not right, were trying to make a living," he said.

needs to be done before authorities can go ahead."

Vorva says the district "intentionally and maliciously tried to make sure everyone with children got out to vote, but that other people didn't. That's why they held the election on a Saturday when regular election day is Monday; to confuse people.

"They intentionally held it in March, knowing that a lot of senior citizens are in Florida or someplace warmer. Also, unlike surrounding jurisdictions, they didn't automatically send out applications for absentee ballots. They did that because they didn't want those people to vote; the same reason the did it on Saturday, and in March. We are saying there's an equal protection problem that violates the Constitution."

will - seek parental support in cases of continued tardiness, Smith added. "Businesses are going to want these young people to be on time, and to be there after they're hired. We should be helping young people grow up to be good citizens, but we aren't doing that."

Administrators say the size of the park and student body (4,600 pupils) complicate enforcement. "The park was never intended to have so many kids," said Canton Principal Pat Patton. "There aren't that many security personnel. They can't be every place. We try as administrators to be out there."

Superintendent Charles Little says, "I continue to believe administration and teachers at the park are doing their job."

Rita McGuire, attendance supervisor at PCEP, says her department does the equivalent of "taking attendance at Joe Louis Arena every day."

She said average daily attendance at the park is 95.3 percent. While policy requires parents to be called after eight absences, they're often called "after five absences. I wish we could call every time a student was absent," said McGuire. "However with the resources allocated to attendance, I think we are doing a very responsible job."

Pat Sarna is a special education paraprofessional at the park. "I am really disgusted with a couple matters, and one is the foul language used by students," she said. "I listen to it every day, and it's getting worse. When I go by and hear it, I say 'Excuse me?' and the kids will say, 'Excuse you what?' or 'F--- you.' You don't know them, and you can't do anything about it.

■ 'Three times a day, my classes are disrupted by pagers going off. There are kids who give no respect to teachers, and teachers allow it. There's a lack of consistency in rule enforcement.'

–High school senior

"It's disturbing to me to have to split kids apart who are in the hall making out. I shouldn't have to do that. I've seen kids spit in girls' hair from the top of the stairs. It's disgusting."

Sarna says fellow staffers are surprised at her attempts to discipline students. "They ask me, 'Aren't you afraid they're going to wreck your car?' Someone has got to take a stand. I can't see how come it has gone this far," she said.

A senior in student government said things are "just ridiculous. Kids are allowed to skip classes and wear pagers. Three times a day, my classes are disrupted by pagers going off. There are kids who give no respect to teachers, and teachers allow it. There's a lack of consistency in rule enforcement," said the student, who asked not to be named because she doesn't want to jeopardize her college scholarship. "I am pretty self-disciplined, but with all these distractions, it's going to deter you from learning," she said.

The PCEP student conduct code bans pagers, tape players and other electronic devices on school property. The code calls for their confiscation by teachers and administrators.

Canton Township also has a municipal ordinance prohibiting possession of pagers by minors.

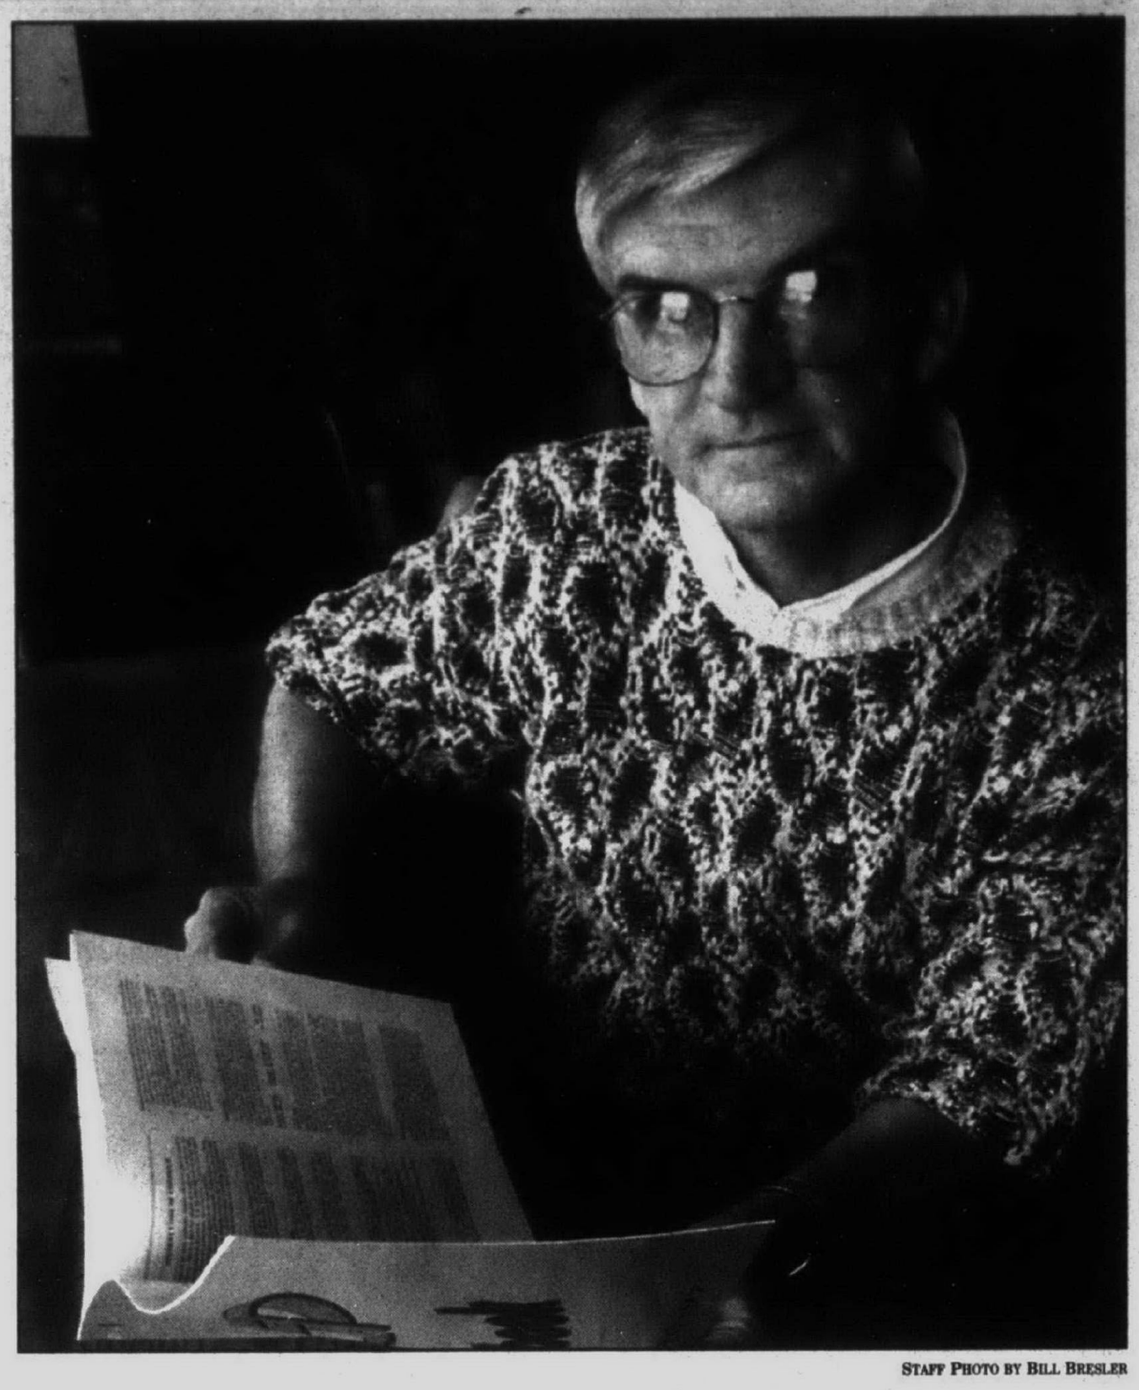

The senior said she sees kids "falling through the cracks. "There are too many loopholes for kids to fall into. I think if students felt that they actually mattered and they weren't just a number, it would have a huge affect. Kids lose interest and hope in themselves. We have plenty of teachers who really care. Sometimes all a kids needs is to be fortunate enough to have one of them."

Gregg says "there are good things going on at the high schools. But that doesn't mean it's OK to let bad behavior exist. If we can't tell 14-,15-, and 16-year-olds what proper behavior is, then they will never learn. We as adults aren't doing the job we need to do."

Patton says the new third high school should help alleviate some of the problems. "We are looking forward eagerly to having more space for our high schools kids. It's very crowded here," said Patton, adding that she spends a lot of time in the halls disciplining kids when she sees dress code violations or hears vulgar language.

"I think our students - all things considered - are remarkably well-behaved," she said. "I myself feel extremely fortunate to be here, and to be able to work with the quality students we have."

The number of students being honored at this week's honors convocation is an indication of "students doing what they're supposed to do without fanfare," Patton added. "I think sometimes our perspective is lost."

doors with their screens punched out, piles of coiled copper wiring, mounds of stainless steel sinks, and scatterings of unidentifiable mechanical innards. And everywhere, shades of dull gray and rust.

Then there's the noise, a cacophony of crushing, pounding sounds often dominated by the baling machine, a Dickensonian contraption set in a deep pit and capable of compacting 20 feet of aluminium into 1,000-pound bales. The bales end up in foundries.

Goldsmith once fell into that pit. "It was pure carelessness. I was very lucky and landed on my feet."

Half of the scrap Goldsmith and Billingsley handle comes from industry and half comes from people in the building trades. They'll take pretty much everything - aluminum, brass, copper, stainless steel, some lead - but iron.

They pay by the pound, except for catalytic converters, which are bought by the piece. Copper goes for 60 cents a pound; tungsten carbide, a hard metal used for cutting other hard metals, goes for $2.

They don't take car batteries, which are a potential source of pollution. Even though they sell the batteries as a commodity, scrap processors can be held financially responsible by the Environmental Protection Agency if they sell to smelters who create hazardous waste products.

Goldsmith said they try to broker out the large industrial deliveries as soon as possible. "Some people think we want big piles of metal here. We don't. We want big piles in other people's yards. We want the money in our bank accoutants," he said.

Goldsmith, a bit of a romantic who flies kites and bakes bread, enjoys telling the story of his grandfather, Morris Goldsmith, who came to the United States in 1910 from Georgia, Russia.

Morris Goldsmith never owned a scrap yard, but he supervised one. He was an inventive man and was responsible for the first baler of iron in Detroit.

Morris had a son, Harold, who also worked in the scrap yard. Both men took a special interest in their employees.

"The men lived in barracks on site. They were paid once every two weeks. My father (Harold) would drive around with his father finding the men who had spent their two-weeks pay - these men would sell their shoes and jackets - and bring them back to work," Goldsmith said.

Morris Goldsmith retired during World War II, a time when dealers started selling bad scrap iron to the government. "A bale can hide a lot of sins, a bag of sand hidden inside scrap. My grandfather had three sons in the Army and just couldn't do that."

Goldsmith's maternal grandfather, Herman Aberly, came from Lithuania and peddled off a wagon. He started with fruits and vegetables. "When he got done selling his produce by 10 in the morning, he thought, "what am I going to do the rest of the day,'" Goldsmith said.

Billingsley, who lives in Westland, describes his heritage as "mutt American." His father, Charles, worked for Harold Goldsmith. Doug Billingsley and Hugh Goldsmith met when they were 10 and 11. "Basically, we were two kids playing in the piles," Billingsley said.

Billingsley is a scrap man at heart. "It's basically all I have ever done. I've always enjoyed it. We get to play with some really big toys," he said.

The two men laugh when asked the inevitble "Jimmy Hoffa" questions. No. They've never found body parts. "Nothing that scary," Goldsmith said.

You've head of "scrap yard dogs?" Haggerty Metals has "Scrap Cat," a large black cat, more furry than fearsome. "There's not too many dogs smart enough not to walk on metal," Goldsmith said.

The Plymouth-Canton chapter of the international Delta Kappa Society bestows this honor just once every two years on a woman who has shown outstanding leadership in the field of education.

Stone began her teaching career at Belleville Junior High. She came to the Plymouth Community Schools and in the next 20 years gave leadership to staff, initiating the TAG program at middle school level, establishing a middle school careers program and other innovations.

Stone also worked to include special education students through team teaching at West and received two competitive grants in support of the program. Other programs that received ocmmunity backing for West students are Peer Mediation for conflict resolution, Career Day, Self Awareness Day and Take Your Daughters and Sons to Work Day.

Businessman returns with generational approach

It's been more than 20 years since Bob Harter first opened his carpet and flooring business in Canton.

Although he eventually moved and spent nearly 11 years in Plymouth Township, he returned the family business to his roots in Canton last April – along a bustling Ford Road just east of Lilley.

"It's really great being back in Canton," said Harter who owns and operates H & B Carpet in the Sears Hardware center. "Business has been great back over here."

Harter's daughter Debbie Queen, a co-owner who handles finance, sales and a variety of other tasks for the local business, agrees.

"I would say Canton's pretty good – that's why we moved from Plymouth to Ford Road," said Queen, a Westland resident and eight-year veteran of the carpet business. "You can remodel your house, eat, and do just about anything along here."

Not only has the business grown from the original 20-by-60 foot retail/warehouse space to a 5,000-square-foot facility, but family involvement has grown as well. The family business now spans three generations: Harter, Queen, and her son David Teets, a freshman at John Glenn High School in Westland, also works part-time at the store where he does everything displaying carpet samples to sweeping up and answering the phone.

"I do general maintenance – whatever," Teets said. "I answer calls and order things. I vacuum and put carpet samples in." He said he's learned a lot about how a business operates by working here.

Harter said a sense of family is important in his business in more way than one. After 20 years in business, he is also finding that he is installing flooring for second generations of families. "I love meeting the people – going to their homes," he said.

He also enjoys working with his family. "It's really nice to be in business with my daughter," he said. "We don't always agree, but I know more about her now than I ever did."

How does a small business survive in this day of large corporations? Harter and Queen say their involvement five years ago with a centralized buying group – CarpetMax of Dalton, Georgia – has allowed them to keep prices down and be competitive in the marketplace.

Home again: David Teets (left), Debbie Queen and Bob Harter spend long hours at H & B Carpet in Canton. Harter has returned to the township he started his career in.

"We saw strength in numbers and we were standing alone," said Harter. "We're paying less today than we were four years ago." He said in 1977, he was installing carpet for $14.99 a yard; and 20 years later, a better quality carpet is being installed for the same price. Although prices have remained stable, the market has changed: in 1977 there were some 500 carpet mills, and there are less than 50 today.

"It's only gotten better," he added, referring to both warranties and the carpet product itself.

In addition, H & B has taken on a full line of area rugs ("very hot" items, according to Harter) and also has laminate and other types of popular flooring. They offer installation and warranty their labor for the life of the home where it is being installed.

Most of their installers have been with them for 10 years or more; one has been installing carpet for 46 years.

Queen said she or Harter frequently visit customers' homes to work with then on colors and other design details. "We can do custom work," she said, including borders on linoleum and carpet.

Harter has some words of advice for those considering opening a small business: "get a good accountant and listen; don't be afraid to take a chance because it's only money; and listen to your customers – they'll tell you all you need to know about yourself. Don't assume."

Engler road plan outlined for CWW board

BY KEN ABRAMCZYK
STAFF WRITER

Jim Ryan believes the average motorist will hardly notice the difference.

Ryan, deputy director of Gov. John Engler's southeastern Michigan office in Detroit, said Engler's proposed 4-cent increase in the gas tax would keep the 19-cent total below the national average, and below every Great Lakes state except Indiana.

"You drive about 15,000 miles a year," Ryan said. "Four cents is about $20 to $25 a year."

Ryan appeared May 9 before the Conference of Western Wayne to outline Engler's proposed $570 million increase in annual funds to repair the state's roads and highways and reform the jurisdiction over those roads.

The CWW is a consortium of elected officials from the cities of Belleville, Dearborn, Dearborn Heights, Garden City, Inkster, Livonia, Northville, Plymouth, Romulus, Wayne and Westland and the townships of Canton, Huron, Northville, Plymouth, Redford, Sumpter and Van Buren.

But officials from the Michigan Muncipal League, a legislative liaison representing Michigan cities and townships, had not figured yet how specific local Wayne County communities would fare under Engler's proposal. County officials already have expressed concerns about the state taking jurisdiction of 90 percent of Michigan roads.

Engler hopes to raise $200 million annually through the gas tax hike, $200 million through increased federal funds and $130 million by ending the diesel discount, increasing registration fees for commercial trucks, creating an overweight truck fee, ending the spillage allowance and general fund offsetting from savings in other departments.

In addition, tort reform to stop outrageous lawsuits provides another $10 million and "wrapup" of insurance coverage for construction projects is expected to save another $30 million.

Road repair, reform

Engler's plan — Build Michigan II — would improve more than 3,300 miles of road each year — an increase of 1,125 miles repaired annually.

"Spending on road construction and repair will increase by $2.8 billion over the next five years," Ryan said. "This proposal not just increases (road) money, but it creates systematic changes throughout the system."

Engler wants to take over roads that meet eligibility for federal roads. "These are the most heavily traveled roads and the most expensive to keep up," Ryan said. Ninety percent of Michigan's roads would fall under state jurisdiction under Engler's plan.

Currently, counties maintain jurisdiction over 58 percent of Michigan roads, the state 28 percent and cities 14 percent.

That system also gives 8 cents to local and county governments for road repairs, and 7 cents to the state. The new 4 cent hike would give an additional 3 cents

Rouge cleanup set for June 7

Volunteers continue to play a major role in the Rouge River's "comeback" story.

That will be evident on Saturday, June 7 when more than 2,500 people are expected to converge on the river for Rouge Rescue '97.

Without volunteers who participate in the 12th annual Friends of the Rouge river cleanup, the Rouge would be clogged with fallen trees and litter.The cleanup is a chance for people to see the river's problems and its potential for being a valuable recreation and economic resource.

In addition to removing fallen trees and other debris from the river, as they have since 1986, volunteers at clean-up sites throughout Wayne, Oakland and eastern Washtenaw counties will also plant trees, build and groom wood-chip walking paths, and build nesting boxes for wood ducks, bluebirds, and brown bats.

They'll also help prevent future pollution by stenciling storm drain inlets with a warning against dumping toxic materials like used motor oil, paint, and lawn or household chemicals.

For the third consecutive year, Rouge Rescue will also include the collection of returnable bottles and cans, which can be redeemed at Farmer Jack supermarkets to support the Friends of the Rouge Education Project, a school-based environmental education program.

Cooperating in this project are Farmer Jack, local bottlers of Coca-Cola and Pepsi Cola, FILA, Imperial Sports and WJBK- Fox 2.

Rouge Rescue sponsors are Ford Motor Co., Waste Management Inc., the Detroit Water & Sewerage Department, City Management Corp. and WJBK Fox 2.

For the location of cleanup sites, and sites where returnable bottles and cans can be dropped off, please contact Friends of the Rouge at (313) 961-4050.

Police testify that parks and rec director had gambling problem, borrowed money

BY DARRELL CLEM
STAFF WRITER

■ Westland police trailed Skene - the former Plymouth parks and recreation director - to a Windsor gambling casino as they investigated allegations that he embezzled money from the city-run Bailey Recreation Center.

Fired Westland Parks and Recreation Director Charles Skene admitted that he had a gambling problem and that he borrowed money from his department's safe, a police official testified Wednesday.

"He admitted that he was addicted to gambling," Lt. Gary Sikorski said during Skene's preliminary hearing in Wayne District Court.

Westland police trailed Skene - the former Plymouth parks and recreation director - to a Windsor gambling casino as they investigated allegations that he embezzled money from the city-run Bailey Recreation Center, where the parks department is based, Sikorski testified.

Skene, 46, admitted during an interview that he also gambled illegally, Sikorski said. A search of trash that Skene discarded near Westland City Hall while he was under surveillance revealed paperwork showing that Skene had more losses then wins, he said.

Skene visited the Riverboat Casino twice one evening, and he was seen entering his office after work hours between the visits, Sikorski said.

In a deepening probe being investigated by Livonia police, Skene also is suspected of withdrawing money from a bank account for a local softball association that used him as treasurer, Sikorski testified.

Skene is suspected of illegally taking money from the softball club to replenish funds he had taken in Westland, the lieutenant said from the stand.

Sikorski's statements came during a preliminary hearing that ended Wednesday with Skene being ordered to stand trial in Wayne County Circuit Court on five felony embezzling charges. He could face a maximum 10-year prison term if convicted.

"Obviously we are disappointed," defense attorney Stephen Boak said after Visiting Judge Glen Valasco made his ruling. "We see the evidence — or lack of evidence — in a much different light."

Boak predicted that Skene will be acquitted at trial. Skene remains free on a $5,000 personal bond.

Skene is accused of embezzling from a Bailey Center safe where his department's money was kept and where a therapeutic booster fund for disabled people was stored. The incidents allegedly occurred from Aug. 7, 1996, to April 12 this year. Mayor Robert Thomas fired him on April 22.

City Finance Director Michael Gorman testified that Skene's department failed to turn over about $7,000 in parks and recreation monies collected during six days spread over four months last year.

Written documents indicate the amounts that should have been submitted by Skene's office to the city treasurer's office, Gorman said.

However, Skene's secretary, Nora Herbert, testified that the city has cashed checks submitted by the parks department on the days in question.

Assistant Wayne County prosecutor Danton Wilson indicated later that the checks could have been slipped into deposits on other days to throw off any potential investigation.

Herbert and Margaret Martin, therapeutic program supervisor, testified that they knew of Skene taking money from funds and leaving personal checks. But Herbert noted that the city had no policy against such actions and that other employees had written personal checks for money.

Martin said she didn't object to Skene writing a personal check and taking therapeutic program money, although testimony indicated that she had a difficult time finding Skene when she fell short on cash and needed him to replace a personal check with cash.

Testimony from Budget Director Elizabeth Duggan indicated that some of Skene's checks weren't dated and didn't include the name of a payee, specifically the city of Westland.

Sikorski testified that he asked Skene during the investigation about one check that wasn't properly written. Sikorski said Skene told him, "I can't tell you why."

Boak argued that Skene shouldn't stand trial because he used personal checks to repay the money he took and because the city had no firm policy against employees borrowing funds.

Chuck Skene, former Plymouth parks and recreation director

"The city of Westland is certainly guilty of bad business practices," he said.

But the prosecutor argued that Skene's checks amounted to "miniature confessions."

Even though a check of city records from 1955-65 shows no evidence of city trash taken there, either the federal EPA or the 3M Company - a waste producer assessed $800,000 in cleanup costs at the Nankin dump - or others assessed damages could sue the city to recover costs, City Attorney Don Morgan said.

A settlement offer - presented by parties who've already paid some dump cleanup costs - asks for Plymouth to pay $60,000. Other neighboring communities have also been asked to pay toward a settlement.

City commissioners on Thursday directed Morgan to seek to negotiate an amount less than $60,000, in hope of making the issue go away.

Attorney Mike Caldwell, assisting the city on the case, said legal costs to defend against such a lawsuit would surely be higher than $60,000.

But payment of such a settlement does not necessarily mean an end to potential city liability, he said.

By city records, trash collected for the city by a private contractor, Denski Brothers, was to be dumped at the Salem Township dump used then by the city.

Caldwell told city commissioners that one former Denski Brothers employee said in a deposition that Plymouth dumped 2 cubic yards of trash there during the period being studied.

Yet, the employee also contradicted himself, saying he didn't know whether city trash had ever been dumped there.

"Do we have a responsibility as a municipality to inspect and understand what they're hauling and where they're hauling?" Commissioner Doug Miller asked.

Morgan said municipalities seeking to settle are expected to do so by the end of the month.

In the last five years, the city has paid more than $1.2 million to perform changing cleanup requirements at the city's former dump in Salem Township, to satisfy federal environmental regulations.

Public can discuss I-275 construction at meetings

The Michigan Department of Transportation has scheduled two 'town hall' meetings to educate the public about improvements to more than 28 miles of I-275.

The construction is scheduled to start in the middle of June.

The first meeting is scheduled at 6 p.m. Wednesday, May 28, at the Carleton VFW Hall, 700 Carleton South Rockwood, Carleton, and a second is scheduled for 6 p.m. Tuesday, June 3, at the Canton Township Hall, Administration Building, 115 S. Canton Center Road.

MDOT will use these informal forums to present details of new construction designs developed to better suit motorists and community needs while expediting the construction process. This approach will minimize the economic impact on communities in areas undergoing improvements.

The four construction areas are:

- From the beginning of I-275 to Telegraph Road, Monroe County
- Telegraph Road to Newberg Road, Monroe County
- Newberg Road to Northline Road/I-94, Wayne County
- Northline Road/I-94 to Five Mile Road/I-96, Wayne County.

to the state and 1 cent to counties and cities, Ryan said.

"Counties revenue would have an average 53 percent increase in revenues per mile for local roads," Ryan said. "Cities will benefit from an average of a 74 percent increase (per mile)."

But that statistic is skewed because the state would be taking over roads normally eligible for federal funds, such as Middlebelt, Grand River, Plymouth and the "Mile" roads.

Ryan sees advantages under the plan and its cost savings through "economies of scale," meaning that the price would drop for the work because separate communities would not have to bid out for portions of work and assuming overhead, labor and administrative costs per mile would drop with the use of one contractor.

Middlebelt was resurfaced in Livonia and Garden City, but not in Inkster. "There isn't a multiple jurisdiction," Ryan said. "The benefit is you have the cost efficiencies. If they bid out for 20 miles of Middlebelt, it will be a lost less expensive, instead of Livonia, Farmington Hills or other cities bidding out separately."

Plan is complex

Ryan said he received mixed reactions to Engler's plan.

"At this point, we've asked people to take a wait-and-see attitude. Most people don't understand the complexities of the plan."

Ryan acknowledged the proposal could lead to layoffs of public service employees, "if their departments aren't the most competitive bidders on that road."

"It's a possibility obviously, if they're not competitive at the best price. Local governments will have to look at those costs."

Ryan said Engler did not want to "abolish" road commissions, only reform the present system. The governor met with the Michigan Municipal League to discuss his plans.

Ryan knows Engler faces the challenges in dealing with lawmakers and lobbyists, each representing different interests.

"The last thing we want to do is raise funds and pour them into a system that is failing. It's a waste of time to raise the tax without any meaningful reform.

"We're just going to have to try to meet with everybody and try to work these things out. For the most part, they have to look at this as a starting point."

■ 'The last thing we want to do is raise funds and pour them into a system that is failing.'

Jim Ryan
—deputy director, Gov. John Engler's southeast Michigan office

Disagrees with tax hike

State Sen. Loren Bennett, R-Canton, supports Engler's reform efforts, but disagrees with the gas tax hike. Spending should be prioritized after reforms occur, he said.

Bennett said that tax hike logic was "that it's always the taxpayers' fault. We're paying 40 percent of what we take in in federal, state and local taxes, and that's more than enough."

The 22 Senate Republicans were expected to discuss the plan at a caucus plan, so Bennett has yet to receive feedback on the plan.

"Right now I have no trust in the county's ability to put out a work product that is acceptable to the taxpayer," Bennett said. Bennett requested the state auditor to review Wayne County records on road repairs and financing.

Dems have plan

For their part, state Democrats proposed a plan to provide nearly $423 million to repair Michigan's roads and bridges without raising the gas tax.

That plan calls for $60 million in additional federal funding from changes in the gas tax distribution formula, a new tax amnesty program to bring in $110 million, $69 million from interest generated by the state's budget stabilization fund, and saving $30 million by stopping the funding of state bureaucracy with gas tax revenue. They proposed increasing truck registration fees and eliminating the State Transportation Commission to raise another $17 million.

The plan assumed an increase of $53 million in gas tax revenue and targets $20 million in diesel fuel tax revenue available but not yet used.

State Rep. Tom Kelly, D-Wayne, who was with House Speaker Curtis Hertel and two other state lawmakers, said the Democrats plan contains the most realistic assumption of addition funding Michigan may receive through changes in the distribution of the federal gas tax revenue.

"Members of our Congressional delegation from both parties are working hard to bring home additional revenue," said Kelly, whose district includes Garden City.

"While we anticipate more revenue, it's unfair to our Congressional delegation to place unrealistic expectations on the outcome of their efforts. Our plan is realistic based on the latest information we've obtained from Congressional leaders and federal transportation officials."

State Rep. Robert Brown, D-Dearborn Heights, whose district includes Redford Township, said he couldn't understand why Engler waited until the "last minute," with an impending deadline of July 1.

"I thought it was an unfair way of doing this," Brown said.

State House OKs appropriations for community colleges

BY TIM RICHARD
STAFF WRITER

Legislators call it a "Christmas tree bill" – one that is drafted simply but becomes decorated with special-purpose amendments.

The $276 million House appropriations bill for community colleges turned into a Christmas tree by the time the House passed it May 13 on a 63-35 vote.

Area community colleges fared well:

- Oakland – $20.2 million, up 4.67 percent.
- Schoolcraft – $10.8 million, up 5.95 percent.
- Wayne County – $16.2 million, up 3.64 percent.
- Lansing – $21.1 million, up 5.04 percent.

The bill went to the Senate Appropriations subcommittee on higher education, which is due to start work May 20. The gross amount was close to the recommendation of Gov. John Engler though many line items were packaged differently.

There were predictions that many of the ornaments wouldn't survive.

"Banning colleges from paying for certain health services is micro-management and violates the spirit of local bargaining unit practices," said Rep. Hubert Price, D-Pontiac, chair of the House Appropriations subcommittee that drafted the bill. He predicted a House-Senate conference committee would drop the ban on using college funds to pay for abortions.

It took three separate roll calls for the House to come up with a 56-50 approval of the amendment banning abortion funding. Here is how area lawmakers voted:

Yes – Bob Brown, D-Dearborn Heights, Gerald Law, R-Plymouth, Deborah Whyman, R-Canton.

No – Lyn Bankes, R-Redford, Tom Kelly, D-Wayne, Eileen DeHart, D-Westland.

Protests came from Kelly – "I will not vote in favor of any legislation that obstructs or interferes with the collective bargaining process at the local level" – and Lynne Martinez, D-Lansing – "irrelevant. . . This bill has become a mixed package of poorly considered social policy decisions."

Additions

- Price won overwhelming support for his amendment adding $2.2 million for a certificate grant program permitting community colleges to train residents for specific local jobs. Oakland Community College will get the maximum grant of $250,000; Schoolcraft, $86,100.

Two Republicans attempted to amend the Price amendment to use the money for roads, but Speaker Curtis Hertel, D-Detroit, ruled it out of order because it was a transportation amendment to an education bill.

Legislators tangle over test marks

BY TIM RICHARD
STAFF WRITER

The Michigan Senate and House are in a tangle over whether High School Proficiency Test marks should be noted on a graduate's records.

Parents and students have objected to the cryptic "proficient," "novice" and "not yet novice" notations that are based on 11th grade test scores. Legislators are trying to change it.

Trouble is, the Senate has amended the supplemental school bill one way, while the House has amended the main 1998 K-12 aid bill another way.

In the Senate, Democratic floor leader Virgil Smith of Detroit accused Republican Mike Bouchard of Birmingham of "plagiarizing" and "stealing" a Democratic amendment. Democrats Gary Peters of Bloomfield Tonwship and Ken DeBeaussaert of Macomb County threw in a tangle of amendments before the air was cleared.

In the end, senators agreed:

- There would be a one-year moratorium on printing all proficiency marks on diplomas.
- A graduate of age 18 or one parent could request the notation of a state-endorsed diploma and notations of "proficient" on the graduate's transcript.

That bill was passed 36-0 with two members absent – John Cherry, D-Clio, and George Z. Hart, D-Dearborn – and sent to the House.

A week earlier, the House amended the school aid bill to provide students' transcripts will include their state proficiency test scores instead of the "proficient," "novice" and "not yet novice" notations. That bill is scheduled for Senate committee action May 20.

Both take credit

Both sides of the Senate aisle took credit for the amendment.

Bouchard's news release gave him credit for sponsoring the amendment placing a one-year moratorium on reporting test results on diplomas and transcripts.

"We have honor students in my district who have failed the test, yet are attending excellent colleges," Bouchard said. "This raises some serious questions about the High School Proficiency Test and whether it accurately tests a student's aptitude."

Peters and DeBeaussaert produced their own news release saying they were "glad to see the Republicans follow (our) lead on changes to the state's controversial High School Proficiency Tests."

Peters added that his amendment to the Bouchard amendment allowed students who did well to have their good performances recorded. "This is a tough test, and a student who does well should be allowed to have it noted. However. . . we should hold harmless those students who do not do as well," he said.

Necessity Mother of Invention for saucy products

Life gets sour sometimes, and when it does, some people take the lemons and make lemonade.

Julie Stumbaugh and Barb Klaserner both raised big families, and were going through a divorce when they met 11 years ago in Redford in a class for displaced homemakers.

"The one thing we both could do is cook," said Stumbaugh. "We decided to go out to lunch together, and instantly became friends."

After some research, and experimenting in the kitchen, they started Jabars Complements, Inc. which is based in Walled Lake. Their "All Natural, Top of the Line," dressings and marinades, vegetable and fruit dips, seasoning blends, and sauces, contain no fat, and fall within dietary guidelines set by the American Heart Association.

They manufacture 30 different products. The newest – Roadkill Roy BBQ Sauce – was named in honor of Julie's son-in-law Dave, who her sons call "Roy."

"Somebody driving ahead of him on the highway hit a deer, so my son-in-law took it home and ate it. My son started teasing him so we had a caricature done of my son-in-law, and put it on this real wild looking label. Everyone loves it, and can't walk by without laughing," said Stumbaugh. "It's a sweet sauce, a little spicy. It has a unique flavor; it's a little smoky, mesquite flavor."

Sometimes things got a little sour. Like the time they were left with lots of peppers after doing a vinegar for a local restaurant. One too many peppers led to the creation of Jabars Pepper Tree Square Sauce Line, which includes Pepper Passion Marinade, Tropical Passion Hot Sauce, Flaming Pepper Passion Hot Sauce, Lemony Lemon Pepper, and Michigan Cherry Passion Hot Sauce.

Julie says people have gotten hooked on their Seasonings – Eastern Style, Gourmet Meat Rub for Beef or Lamb, Pork or Chicken, Seasoning Italian Style, and Special Blend Seasoning for Turkey & Pork, and have got to have them.

"We really love it, and love coming up with new ideas, and seeing people's reaction to them," said Stumbaugh with her partner nodding yes in agreement. "It's a rewarding thing to see something you've created enjoyed by people."

They say when God closes one door he opens another. That's certainly true for Julie and Barb who count their blessings every day. "We feel that God gave us the thought to start this business, and brought us together," said Stumbaugh.

Look for Jabars Complements at Vic's World Class Market in Novi, or call (810) 669-9211 for mail order information. Their vinaigrettes retail for $5, dressings and marinades $5, dip mixes $3, seasoning blends, $4 and sauces $3 to $5.

Sweet Lorraine

In store: Lorraine Platman of Sweet Lorraine's has something new in store for customers – her Sweet Poppyseed Dressing and Jamaican "Jerk" Marinade are now available at many local upscale food stores. Michigan artist Dave Moroski designed the label.

"I love it personally because I'm always on diets, and can add flavor without fat by using it," she said. Platman known for her deli in Madison Heights, and restaurants in Ann Arbor and Southfield, is an innovator who never tires of experimenting. Because honey mustard was so expensive, when she opened her deli 15 years ago, Platman made her own Honey Bee Mustard. "We couldn't afford the stuff," she said. "I made my own to keep costs down." Later she created Calypso Hot & Spicy

Seeking to be the best

Fame finds Famie

BY RUTH MOSSOK JOHNSTON
SPECIAL WRITER

Who is this wild and crazy guy who dons a chef's coat as daily attire, flails a knife in quick precision, ice fishes in Orchard Lake for a TV food spot, and cooks a fish on the engine of his truck? Part adventure seeker, part local celeb, part regular guy, but biggest part – chef. He is Keith Famie. This energetic 37-year-old is on a mission – to be the best, to have the best, and enjoy the best. Not all bad for a guy who didn't go to the Culinary Institute of America.

Traveling around, and learning from well-known culinary professionals after graduating from Farmington High School in 1978, Famie credits Michigan Culinary transplant chefs Duglass (Douglas Gretch) from The Great Dane and Duglass Duglass, Stuart Anderson from Jacques, Yvonne Gill (now Yvonne Uhlianuk) from The Money Tree and Lisa Twomey's and Chef Mateo Cibelli from The Golden Mushroom, with the European influence that set the culinary tone here in the Metropolitan Detroit area.

"It was these chefs that developed the Culinary Brat Pack," says Famie – "you know, Brian Polcyn, Steve Allen, Rick Halberg, Greg Upshur, Tom MacKinnon, Jeff Gabriel, Danny Hugelier, Ed Janos, Peter Loren, Kevin Brennen, Gary Pierce, and me." These well-known role model chefs and mentors have made way for the younger set, but their talent, influence, and training remains, and our prominent local chefs are the proof of the pudding.

In 1982 (and a mere 22) Famie started out as Chef de Cuisine at the Wisne owned Raphael's restaurant in Novi (later Chez Rafael, then renamed Too Chez), dazzling the clientele with trendy, upscale, elaborate dishes – actually opening that restaurant with talented Maitre' d, Achille Bianchi (who is still there!)

"We were an incredible combination – Achille and I, a real working relationship" relates Famie. Well, things have come full circle, and as they say 'what goes around, comes around,' and the Wisne's are Famie's cordon.

From 1988 to 1993, Famie in a mode of entrepreneurship, opened the well-known Les Auteurs, An American Bistro in Royal Oak, and later transformed it into the Cowboy motif Durango Grill. In 1995, after a short ride, the doors of Durango closed. Climbing back in the saddle, Keith concentrated on Famie's Finds, his (sometimes adventure-filled, always delicious) cooking-segments, his future, and his two young children.

■ This energetic 37-year-old is on a mission – to be the best, to have the best, and enjoy the best. Not all bad for a guy who didn't go to the Culinary Institute of America.

What other chef would have a canoe, paramount in the midst of Victor Saroki's beautifully designed downtown Birmingham eatery? The canoe is not part of the fabulous decor at Forté, but a prop for one of his Famie's Finds WDIV-TV 4 tapings. Keith seems endlessly happy and passionate about his current life – he's got the formula down after a few big disappointments – both professional and personal. And working "on the line" nightly at Forté seems to be part of the recipe to his happiness.

"I'm a make everything work kinda-guy," says Famie, and his restaurant credo is "lets have fun and do our job." Keith is certainly doing that – his drive is as endless as his passion for cooking – a master of public relations, he knows how to put things together. His approachable style is certainly a likable quality.

The food at Forté might be described as Mediterranean-California-style – but always on the edge. "My cooking is now reflective of my lifestyle – healthier. I'm a workout freak, I box every day, and I eat better."

Fresh food is key. Dishes range from simple to complex, but always utilize the freshest of ingredients. The Wisne's (Epoch Enterprises) are smart restaurateurs. Toni Wisne specifically

FOCUS ON WINE
BY KAY & ELEANOR HEALD

Take a sip of madeira, m'dear!

Madeira is a remote island in the Atlantic Ocean, 300 miles off the west coast of North Africa, and 500 miles from Portugal, the country to which it belongs. Most wine lovers know Porto from Portugal, but often fail to discover another of its fine wines, madeira.

The first Portuguese settlers brought malvoisie (or malvasia), a white grape from Crete to the island of Madeira. This grape was christened "Malmsey" by the British. Some years later, Jesuit fathers planted three other grape varieties, sercial, verdelho and bual. These four grapes create the noble madeira wine portfolio.

Once trading ships launched on the high seas to and from the New World, many stopped at the island of Madeira's deep water port of Funchal to load provisions which often included barrels of madeira, fortified by brandy addition. Fortification not only prolonged the wine's life and increased its alcohol strength, but became a part of its recognized style. Westbound ships passed through the tropics. On-board barrels of madeira experienced elevated temperatures as high as 95°F for days or even weeks. This agreeably altered the wine by giving it the characteristic "burnt" taste with a tang, favorably associated with madeira. To imitate on-board "heating" in modern times, estufagem, or the process of heating the wine in a loft, was incorporated into madeira production methods.

There's a saying in Madeira that "high is dry and low is rich." Sercial grapes grow on Madeira's highest slopes and make the driest wine. Pale or golden with a refreshing lift of acidity at the end, it is a perfect aperitif served slightly chilled. Verdelho and bual grapes are grown further down the mountain slopes. These are medium-rich, golden-colored wines. Verdelho is drier than bual and is best served before a meal or to those who prefer a dry dessert wine. Bual is distinctly designed as a dessert pour. It's good with nutty cheese such as Monalisa Gouda. Malmsey, a fragrant, full-bodied, richly-flavored, sweet dessert wine, grows in foothill vineyards. A blend of sercial, verdelho and/or bual is known as Rainwater Madeira. It's medium dry and suitable as an aperitif or as light, liquid dessert.

Three major brands of madeira are in this market. Cossart Gordon, one of the oldest madeira shippers was founded in 1745, Leacock's in 1760 and Blandy's in 1811. The styles within each brand are different and "liking" is a matter of individual preference.

Leacock's Rainwater Madeira $14 is probably the best known. Blandy's 5 year Sercial, Verdelho, Bual or Malmsey, all $21, are light and elegant. Blandy's dry Sercial is excellent. The Cossart Gordon style is fuller, richer and sweeter. Try their Rainwater $17, 10 year bual $38.50 and 5 year Malmsey $23. Once opened, a bottle of madeira remains stable and drinkable for two to three months.

Madeiras are kitchen versatile and can be used in sauces or soups. Use madeira in place of sherry or Port in a recipe calling for either. A dry madeira (Sercial, Verdelho or Rainwater) gives a unique flavor twist to an easy chicken preparation. In cooking, all alcohol evaporates; only the special flavors remain.

works very closely with Chef Famie, and gives him the kind of free rein he needs. Designing the kitchen himself, Keith determined his needs, and created a sleek, stainless steel kitchen with a huge hearth oven, that would meet those needs, and highlight his talents.

This same chef is one of six (five other chefs, and one waitress) who give up Christmas Eve (this past Christmas Eve was their 10th), to cook for the homeless at a dinner sponsored by COTS the Coalition of Temporary Shelters. Famie is tied to the Detroit area, his family is here, and of course, Alicia and Josh ages 4 and 6.

When asked about the future, Keith relates his ideal situation – "someday I'd love a ranch out west, a place where terminally ill kids, or kids who don't have much, could come and fish and have fun."

His ideal may be cooking trout someday on a ranch, but for now, his plans include going to China to cook. In October Chef Famie, and a select crew from Forté, will prepare a special dinner in Shanghai, China, for Gov. John Engler and 125 of his guests, to celebrate the new Michigan Trade Office.

A Grand Style Buffet will highlight Michigan products producing a Michigan Menu, not dissimilar to the 1989 event Chef Famie did in Paris for 200 guests of the American Ambassador to France.

Closer to home at Forté, 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, May 20, Fontant de France wines bring together Chefs Laurent and Jacques Pourcel (twin brothers) of the Jardin des Sens, the two star Michelin restaurant in Montpellier, France along with Chef Keith Famie for a collaborative effort of talent – to kick off Forté's special monthlong Mediterranean feast for the senses.

That evening, there will be a five course prix fixe menu of small courses "a tasting menu") especially chosen and paired with Fontant wines. This event costs $75 per person plus tax and gratuity. For reservations, call (810) 594-7300.

Kitchen Glamor at Orchard Mall, on the northeast corner of Maple and Orchard Lake Roads in West Bloomfield, will offer a sneak preview of this unique event 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Tuesday, May 20. There is no charge for this cooking demonstration.

Mustard. Sweet Poppyseed Dressing is a longtime customer favorite.

A year-and-a-half ago Platman took a big step. "We saw gourmet food products connected with stores, and knew some of our items would be advantageous to home cooks," she said. Sweet Lorraine's two signature mustards, Jamaican "Jerk" Marinade, and famous Sweet Poppyseed Dressing are available for purchase at her restaurants, and 48 stores in metro Detroit including Hudson's, Merchant of Vino, Papa Joe's, Vic's, Westborn, and Shopping Center Markets.

"They're real, and come from the heart," she said. "Everyone knows we put extra effort into making it as healthy as possible," she said about her products. Look for her No-fat Roasted Garlic Balsamic Vinaigrette and No-Fat Strawberry Vinaigrette to be introduced in September. Sweet Poppyseed Dressing is $3.95; Jamaican "Jerk" Marinade $4.95, and the mustards $2.95 each.

Native West

Known for "Unique American Southwest Art," Native West, 863 W. Ann Arbor Trail in downtown Plymouth, is not the first place you'd think of shopping for salsa, salad dressing, sauces, hot and spicy dips, barbecue sauce, soup, cornbread, and chili mixes.

"Everything we sell is from New Mexico or Arizona," said Annette Horn. "We thought these food items would be a fun addition to our store."

Annette and her husband, Ken, are also award-winning chili cooks who are as serious about food as they are about art. "In our search for brands to be featured we had to be picky," said Horn explaining how she chose Coyote Cocina products, including red and green salsas, hot sauce, peach preserves, and chili honey, which are made in Sante Fe. It's a well-known brand name, created by Mark Miller, owner of Coyote Cafe, a five star restaurant.

Six Shooter Salsa by Cowpoke Cuisine and Hogwild Chili Mix are also available. "It's an absolutely wonderful mix, and won first place at the 1996 Fiery Foods challenge in New Mexico," said Horn. "Salsas are a like a mini fiesta for the taste buds. It's fun food." Native West will be offering Pinon Blend Coffee for sale this summer. Native West is open seven days. They stay open until 8 p.m. Thursdays and Fridays, call (313) 455-8838 for more information.

Dress salads with colorful greens, zesty toppings

Salads are a welcome addition to any meal. Colorful and crispy, they can provide a variety of flavors to fit almost any menu. As a separate course, a side dish or the main attraction, salads are one of the best ways to get one or several of your recommended five daily servings of vegetables and fruits.

It's customary to start a salad with a base of greens. Although iceberg lettuce is a traditional source of crunch, it's 95 percent water and virtually vitamin-free. Boston, Bibb or romaine lettuce are more nutritious alternatives if you prefer a mild-flavored leaf. Get the bold flavor and greater nutrition of darker greens by combining peppery watercress and arugula with more mild-mannered lettuces in your next salad mix.

Traditional green salad vegetables, such as tomatoes, green pepper, cucumber, carrots and onion contain lots of vitamins and minerals, but why not venture a little further into the garden?

The healthiest diet provides variety, and salads are a great way to introduce new and interesting foods. toss in some cooked corn kernels, crisp-tender zucchini rounds, sugar snap peas, garbanzo beans, or roasted red pepper strips. cooked grains and legumes, such as barley, lentils and bulgur wheat are fiber-and nutrient-rich additions that make your salad even more of a meal.

Many fruits mix well in vegetable salads. Sharp, juicy grapefruit is a perfect partner for crunchy, licorice-flavored fennel. Try a snappy strawberry and cucumber salad seasoned with a bit of black pepper and lime juice. Oranges are always a welcome addition to a green salad, or toss together orange slices with grated carrot, fresh dill an orange juice vinaigrette.

Dressings can be the downfall of a wholesome salad. Traditional dressings can be more than 90 percent fat and just a few tablespoons can make a significant dent in your entire day's recommended fat allowance. Get added flavor instead from the large number of low-fat or fat-free dressings available at the supermarket. Or, make your own dressing with plain yogurt, nonfat yogurt, chopped fresh herbs, flavored vinegars and fruit juices.

Sample Crisp Green Salad with Tonnato Dressing and you'll agree that low-fat doesn't mean low-flavor.

CRISP GREEN SALAD WITH TONNATO DRESSING

Dressing:

- 1 (6 1/2 ounce) can water packed chunk light tuna drained
- 1 clove garlic
- 1/4 cup Dijon mustard
- 2 teaspoons red wine vinegar
- 1 tablespoon olive oil
- 1/4 teaspoon dried oregano
- 2-3 anchovy filets, drained and rinsed (optional)
- 1/2 cup chicken broth
- Freshly ground pepper to taste

Salad:

- 8 Romaine lettuce leaves
- 8 red bell pepper rings
- 4 green bell pepper rings
- 8 slices cucumber
- 12 red onion rings (optional)

In a blender or food processor, combine the tuna, garlic, mustard, vinegar, olive oil, oregano and anchovies (if using), stopping once or twice to scrape down the sides of the container. add the chicken broth and blend until the dressing has the consistency of thin mayonnaise. Season to taste with pepper. If possible, refrigerate 2-3 hours before using, allowing flavors to blend.

Tear lettuce into bite-size pieces and mound on a serving platter. Arrange pepper rings, cucumber, and onion rings over the lettuce. Pour over 1/2 cup of the dressing and serve. (This dressing keeps 2-3 days in a tightly sealed container in the refrigerator).

Use leftover dressing on a rice salad made with diced bell pepper, red onion, green peas, and chopped Italian parsley.

Bridal beauty is a matter of style

BY JEFFREY BRUCE
SPECIAL WRITER

In order to help you produce the best wedding with memories and photos that you will be happy to bring out, I offer some advice that I have gleaned over many years of working at weddings.

Weddings are becoming more elaborate, with wedding planners proliferating to the point of being almost standard. People are creating theme weddings in order not to have the same wedding as everyone else. There are so many things that are involved in putting together a wedding that it is easy to feel that it is getting out of control. There are, however, three areas that you control, and once you have a handle on these, the others will seem more manageable.

BEAUTY AND THE BEST

JEFFREY BRUCE

The Dress: Perhaps nothing takes more time or deliberation than the wedding dress. It can set the tone for the whole wedding, and will be in every photo and memory of that day.

Make sure that you are not overwhelmed by the dress. You are wearing the dress, not the other way around. This is not a time to be experimental. Stick with the classic styles, the traditional colors and fabrics. You may want to combine a very simple style with an elaborate fabric. It is easier to tell you what not to do, or what to avoid. Do not have enormous sleeves unless you are a fan of Imelda Marcos. If you are five feet tall, you may want to rethink a 30-foot cathedral-length train. Unless you are bohemian or out to shock, you may want to avoid black and deep green. All of the following look good on a gown: pearls, beading, sequins, lace, tulle, bows, quilted fabrics, etc. But please, select only one.

Form-fitting gowns can look great, providing you have a figure that warrants this fit. Unless you have slender, wonderfully toned arms, do not wear a sleeveless dress. Similarly, you may want to pay attention to how the neckline suits your figure. Don't wear too many petticoats, unless you are producing an antebellum theme wedding. Otherwise, you will have trouble dancing, sitting down, and getting near people. The time of the day dictates which style you choose, but make sure to flatter your most positive figure asset.

The Hair: This is also not the time to do anything drastic. Do not take this opportunity to dye your hair a new color or get a tight perm. It also does not mean that you have to have your hair up. The hair style you choose should look good in an evening gown and a pair of jeans. If your hair looks its best down and to the side, then that may be the style you want to go with.

At the very least, spend some time before the wedding looking for a stylist that you trust and have your hair done in the style you intend on the day. This will take any anxiety away from your wedding day morning. If you want to dress your hair up, you can always add sprigs of flowers, or even better, wear a pair of wonderful earrings. If your dress is elaborate, then you may want to complement it with a simple hairstyle and veil. The last thing you want is your bridegroom wondering who is coming down the aisle!

The Makeup: My best advice to you is to start a few months before the wedding by taking good care of your skin. You don't want the stress of the wedding to break you out. Remember to drink a lot of water. Your makeup should look subtle but strong. That may sound like a contradiction, but it simply means that you don't want to look garish, with strange colors, with too much eyeliner.

But you need to have a great foundation, and to carry powder with you for coping with the shine that will inevitably happen. You are going to be kissing a lot of people, eating and drinking, and so it is important to repair your lipstick from time to time. If you start with a great lip liner, you will have less of a problem.

Make sure that your blusher is well applied, and stay with the roses, pinks and peaches. Avoid browns and purples, which will look out of place with your wedding dress, especially if you are wearing white, ivory or bone.

Keep in mind that everywhere you turn, people will be taking photos of you. The lighting and photographers will differ. You will want to look back with as much enjoyment as possible at the photos, and not just see a couple of red dots in a sea of white. So think of yourself as being on stage, and make yourself up for the occasion.

Response to the private appointments I held in May at the Townsend Hotel in Birmingham was so large that I have decided to put in more dates for June. If you can't join me there, I will also be visiting salons in Windsor, Highland, Ann Arbor and Flint. For further details call 800-944-6588.

Bone up on dinos

Oakland Mall exhibit teaches pre-history

What are eight prehistoric animals doing at a 20th century shopping center?

Nestled amid foliage and rocks, they are roaring and twisting to entertain and inform shoppers about their world, now through July 7 at the Oakland Mall in Troy.

A computer-controlled air compressor gives the Stegosaurus, Tyrannosaurus Rex, Chasmosaurus and Protoceratops their own unique sequence of movement and sound. Their skins are molded from silicone using a patented process based on existing patterns from fossilized dinosaur skin created by Kokoro Dinosaurs of Los Angeles.

Accent the positive

BY BARB PERT TEMPLETON
SPECIAL WRITER

Some historians argue that Richard Nixon lost the presidency to John Kennedy in 1960 simply because Kennedy had a makeup artist prepare him for the televised debates and Nixon didn't.

Today, meeting with an image-consultant is de rigueur for anyone in the public eye.

Select hair salons in the malls and on Main Streets offer hair and makeup lessons. The upscale department stores offer wardrobe planning services. But sometimes you need to seek out a professional image consultant who can help you with an overall "look".

How do they do it?

Skin tones set the pace. Once you compliment them with the right make-up, hair style and clothing, you have conquered the task of looking your best according to image consultant Dawn Bause.

"Sometimes people are attracted to colors that don't suit them. I tell them 'decorate your house in those colors but please, don't wear them," smiled Bause, owner of Color Associates in Southfield.

Bause has been helping local people get their image polished for promotions and public appearances for a decade. Her client list includes 300 women who have appointments with her twice a year to have their image reevaluated. Bause recently extended her services as an image counselor to corporations across metro-Detroit who call her in to give their staff a "professional appearance update."

"In some cases the employees are just getting lax in their look for the office," said Bause, who feels the recent surge in corporate casual attire hasn't hurt her business. "I actually have a slide show called Casual Friday that I take to these companies and it shows people what's appropriate for that day because some do get a little too casual."

Giving people frank advise about their appearance doesn't bother Bause although she admits she has to watch her tendency to offer tips that aren't solicited.

"Sometimes I end up telling someone at the airport what they should be doing," smiled Bause. "My husband says I get away with murder telling people these things but I just love it."

On the downside of the profession, Bause said being a consultant means she can't afford to ever be seen in an unpolished state.

"I can't go out anytime, without having my make-up, hair and clothes in order," she said.

Looking good at all times is something the clients of popular metro-Detroit image consultant Robin Manoogian expect.

Manoogian, owner of About Face Beauty Spa in Royal Oak, has a huge following that includes corporate heads, local media stars and national celebrities. The local make-up artist, who spent ten years providing fashion tips and a fresh look for Kelly and Company co-host Marilyn Turner, considers her new Royal Oak salon her home base. Still she manages to take her consulting show on the road a dozen times a week.

"This month I'm doing Channel 7's Robbie Timmons everyday," said Manoogian. "A few weeks ago I did Vice President Al Gore when he was in town to do an on-camera video for the Cancer Foundation."

Noting that the vice president was "quite charming", Manoogian pointed out she has had the honor of powdering the First Face on three different occasions.

"I did President Bill Clinton twice before he was elected, and once afterwards," said Manoogian. "One of the times was for the cover of Newsweek. When he came back here later he autographed the cover for me. I also did Hilary once when she was going to appear on Good Morning America and she was very, very, easy to work with," Manoogian added.

Later she was reintroduced to the first couple on several occasions while traveling as a consultant for Detroit's own Aretha Franklin. Manoogian tended to the star during several White House appearances.

More recent assignments Manoogian has enjoyed include her work with rocker John Mellencamp when he appeared at the Fox Theater last month, and her prepping of Senator Carl Levin for his recent appearance on This Week With David Brinkley.

"I enjoy my work immensely. I work probably 18 hours a day," said Manoogian. "Plus, I still do consulting for weddings or with models for photo shoots."

Manoogian is at About Face Beauty Salon (248) 399-1330; Bause is at Color Associates (248) 353-6884 or 363-8080.

French linens at new Somerset shop

BY LINDA BACHRACK
SPECIAL WRITER

In addition his reputation as an astute Parisian businessman, Dominique Michel is a creative and talented designer.

See for yourself at the Carre' Blanc boutique just-opened at Somerset Collection South in Troy.

Michel is vice president of the world-renowned home linens company and he paints the designs that are ultimately printed on the linen collections' cotton duvet covers, pillow shams and sheeting.

Carre' Blanc's charming French catalog proclaims, "With blue ink, he has drawn the sea and the wind. With white, he talks about the springtime's freshness. For luck, he adds a touch of red on a sailor's hat. When Dominique Michel invites us to share his imaginary world, let us go!"

By the sea

The linen designs to which these words refer include nautical-inspired Berets Marins (The Midshipman's Dream) and Bienvenue a' Bord! (Welcome On Board), and a tablecloth collection fittingly named Herbier d'ete' (The Summertime Herb Garden).

Jean-Claude Gotheron, CEO of Carre' Blanc's new U.S. division, explained the company's philosophy.

"We produce two complete linen collections a year," he said. "From the collection, we choose several of the best designs and create serving pieces to match. It's the breakfast in bed idea," he added in his lilting French accent.

The ensembles also include bath and beach towels, robes for children and adults, and table linens. King size duvet covers range in price from $65-200, with the average price point at $100 – surprisingly affordable for European bed linens.

Gotheron says that the textiles were remanufactured for the U.S. market to assure a 180-200 thread count. Europeans prefer 140-160 maximum threads per inch.

The 1,200-square foot cottage look Somerset shop, with bleached wood flooring and lightly-pickled pine fixtures and armoires is the fifth boutique to open in the U.S. Other locations are in St. Louis, Miami, Dallas and Orlando. In business for 13 years, Carre' Blanc has 140 stores in the world, 95 of them in France.

The Somerset store manager Michel Mathieu recently relocated from France and hopes to bring a touch of Parisian romance to Troy.

His job shouldn't be too difficult in a shop draped with Mimosa, Poppy and Marguerite-covered textiles. The atmosphere will have shoppers dreaming of ProvenCal gardens and Mediterranean seascapes.

Where can I find?

Thanks to all who phoned in locations for the hard-to-find items last week!

• A reader called to say that Estee Lauder has a phone line where clients can order some discontinued products (like lipsticks) 1-800-945-ORDER, Monday-Friday 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. and Saturday 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.)

• The creator/manufacturer of Easterbrook pens, Glen Easterbrook of Livonia, called to say he takes special orders through (313) 425-2519 or by fax (313) 540-9660.

• Thanks to all the callers who offered their ice cream machines with cranks to the Daedal Doors crew. They've got all they need according to producer J.J. Bankert.

• Judy Pierce of Redford suggests that sometimes video stores will sell older versions of Disney classics to customers if they have several copies of the film. Count the films on the shelf and approach the owners. "That's how I got "Lady and The Tramp" for my daughter," she said.

We still need to find:

• A glass bowl in the shape of a fish for Janet Dixon.

• Six-story Purple Martin homes made of wood for "Patty" of West Bloomfield. "I don't want one made of metal. I'm hoping someone might build them of wood as a hobby."

• Nylon gloves for "Betty" of Redford that allow you to put on your pantyhose without tears or snags.

• A videotape copy of The Music Man for "Dennis." He is also looking for old, collectible snow globes.

If you've seen any of these items in your travels, let Malls & Mainstreets know and we'll print the answers. Please call (248) 901-2567 and relate your message and phone number slowly and clearly!

Rouge Friendly businesses cited

River-friendly: Jim Jimmerson, production manager of the Observer & Eccentric Newspapers, receives a certificate from Karen Reaume, a senior scientist with Environmental Consulting & Technology. The certificate cited the newpaper for its commitment to being a 'Rouge Friendly' business.

Several businesses in Wayne and Oakland counties were recently recognized for efforts in the Rouge Friendly Business Program.

The Rouge Friendly program is the first water quality education program in the watershed to focus entirely on helping businesses help the Rouge River.

Businesses actually can pollute the river by spilling materials or wastes in parking lots without cleaning them up, allowing materials or wastes stored outside to leak or rinse wash water down a storm drain.

Any chemical on the ground can become a water pollutant since storm water runoff and wash water collect pollutants as they travel. Whatever is washed down a storm drain eventually reaches the Rouge River and the Great Lakes without benefit of any treatment.

The program's mission is to restore the water quality of the Rouge by reducing pollutants entering the river. In this program, information and assistance is provided to businesses to help them prevent pollution.

The following businesses in western Wayne County were recently recognized as Rouge Friendly: Midwest Auto Auction, 14666 Telegraph,, Redford; SNAPP, 12999 Fairlane, Livonia; Haber Operations, 13500 Wayne, Livonia; GPD, 35457 Industrial Drive, Livonia; Guardian Plumbing & Heating, Guardian Environmental Service, 34360 Glendale, Livonia; Entela, 35550 Industrial Road, Livonia; Clearon Corp., 35750 Industrial Road, Livonia; Observer & Eccentric Newspapers, 36251 Schoolcraft, Livonia; and Orchard, Hiltz & McCliment, 34935 Schoolcraft, Livonia.

The Rouge Friendly program is sponsored by Wayne County's Department of Environment. Funding for the program's development and first years of implementation has been provided by a grant from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

To find out more about the Rouge Friendly Business Program, call the business coordinator at (313) 961-0700.

Adamany: State was 'generous' to WSU

BY TIM RICHARD
STAFF WRITER

Even though the Legislature has been generous to Wayne State University, the Detroit campus' is "stretched thin" to meet changes in the new global economy, said retiring President David Adamany.

"I've had the pleasure of living through a number of economic cycles where the state has supported us generously," Adamany said at his 15th and last annual appearance before a Senate Appropriations subcommittee May 9.

"Even in the worst of times, the state has been highly favorable," Adamany said, producing a chart to show WSU has held the line on student tuitions better than any of the 14 other state universities.

Since 1983, WSU has raised tuition 81.7 percent compared to 172.5 percent at the University of Michigan's Ann Arbor campus and Michigan State University's 160.5 percent. In the middle of the pack were Eastern Michigan, sixth at 151.3 percent, and Oakland University, ninth at 135.7 percent.

Adamany, who announced his impending retirement shortly after the Legislature amended the Open Meetings Act to allow the WSU board a measure of secrecy in picking his successor, was treated like a conquering hero by the panel, which presented him a framed certificate to the accompaniment of flash cameras.

"What is your vision for the next decade?" asked Sen. John J.H. Schwarz, R-Battle Creek, chair of the subcommittee.

"We must continue to be an opportunity for worthy students to get a good education," Adamany began. "We must double as a major research university in this area. And given the distress in Detroit – conditions for children are still terrible – our public outreach must continue to expand.

"We've been one of the anchor in the redevelopment in the central city. University policy has been to buy abandoned buildings and rehabilitate or demolish them to avoid blight. There is no gate that keeps the community out," he said, referring to (literally) the open-door policy of campus buildings.

"We have a police department, with arrest power, that made 4,500 runs (on campus) last year and another 4,500 to surrounding neighborhoods."

Gov. John Engler recommended $220 million for WSU in the coming fiscal year, up 2.5 percent. The House raised it to $228 million, up 6.2 percent. Schwarz didn't say what figure he had in mind, but he wore a green and gold tie, signifying he earned his medical degree from WSU.

Adamany highlighted these areas of WSU's challenges:

• Its graduate enrollment (for master's, doctorates and law degrees) is 12,278 – third highest in the nation (behind New York University and Harvard) and ahead of U-M, Central Michigan and Michigan State.

• 74 percent of its alumni stay in Michigan, concentrated in the metropolitan Detroit area.

• Enrollment has dipped as the economy has boomed. Fewer laid-off persons want or need to work on advanced degrees; overtime keeps many workers from enrolling.

• Degree programs have been pared to 359 from 381 because of low degree rates. But WSU is unlikely to phase out too many programs with low enrollments because "our students are placebound and can't go to another university. One-third are married and raising children."

• 48 percent of undergraduates are taught by faculty, 40 percent by adjunct faculty and 13 percent (rounded off) by graduate students. "The adjunct faculty are deeply committed teachers," Adamany said, citing engineering professionals and 30 Detroit Symphony Orchestra musicians.

• Class sizes are about 27 for freshmen and sophomores and 22-23 for juniors and seniors – "as small as the elite universities," he said.

What's next for Adamany himself?

"One does not know," said the son of Lebanese immigrants. "Teaching in the law school. Research on campaign finance. Working in Washington."

Sheriffs looking for a few good driving habits

With school out soon and summer in full swing, the number of young drivers on the road will increase as they enjoy the warm summer days and nights.

Starting May 16, Wayne County Sheriff's Road Patrol will be on the lookout for young drivers exercising good driving habits and behavior.

Top drivers will be pulled over by Sheriffs deputies and rewarded with two tickets to a Detroit Tigers baseball game. "This program is to recognize responsible young people to use good judgment and practice safe driving principles," said Robert Ficano, Wayne County sheriff.

Good driving habits include:

• Extending courtesy to other motorists and pedestrians
• adhering to speed limit
• wearing a seat belt
• never drinking and driving
• keeping your eyes fixed on the road
• tuning out distractions.

Concern over the child who struggled through this grade...
Many parents and teachers are asking, "How will they ever make it next year?"
For kids with attention deficit, who avoid reading and hate paperwork, who forget their spelling and lose their place when they read...THERE IS HOPE!
Summer is fast approaching and many parents and teachers are worried about the child who needs help before school starts again in the fall. To them, this is an urgent reminder.
A child's vision is a key to learning, and is often overlooked. It may be the reason, or part of the reason, your child is smart in everything but school. "School vision screenings and basic eye exams do not include testing for prolonged focus needed for school. Simple 20/20 vision is not enough for success in school," states John P. Jacobi, O.D., F.C.O.V.D. "The child could have headaches, or even be seeing double, and still pass those tests."
If your child has been diagnosed with A.D.D. or is having learning problems, headaches, or avoids school work, a full vision and visual processing evaluation is needed. "After years of searching for answers, my child was finally diagnosed and ... has been through ... this struggle. "My child is anxious to go back to school. She now knows there is hope to improve instead of being so defeated all the time. My biggest regret is that we were not aware of this program sooner," shares another parent. "Thank you for giving Sara a better and brighter tomorrow."

For kids with A.D.D., poor readers and poor spellers..THERE IS HOPE!
Children with learning problems are seen daily at the office of Dr. Jacobi, specialist in children's vision. You may schedule a full vision and visual processing evaluation at (313) 525-8170. Dr. Jacobi will also be the guest speaker at P.A.V.E., Parents Active for Vision Education, on June 3, 7:00 p.m. at Livonia's Civic Center Library. He will discuss how to MAKE THIS SUMMER COUNT - Summer Enrichment activities for parents of struggling children.

'Special' volunteers benefit from giving

Music therapist Margaret Hull of Birmingham beamed with pride as two of her students sang an Elvis tune at the Very Special Arts Festival at Wonderland Mall, Livonia May 3.

Brandon Walker and Marlon Smith, students at Herrington Elementary in Pontiac, didn't let their disabilities stand in the way of belting out "Blue Suede Shoes."

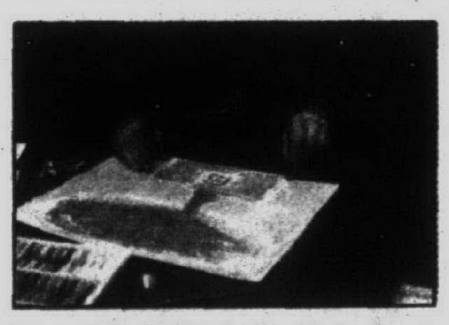

Presented by the Southeast Region Committee of Very Special Arts, the festival celebrates the power of arts to triumph over disabilities by showcasing the achievements of persons with hearing, sight, mobility, and developmental and emotional impairments. This year, 120 children and adults, strutted their stuff, putting to use skills learned in Very Special Arts programs, or programs funded by Very Special Arts mini-grants.

Opening doors

"If you've ever heard the song, 'I Believe I Can Fly,' then you know what performing does for these kids," said Hull. "It makes my students feel like they can soar. It opens doors for them. They are the stars."

Very Special Arts was founded for individuals who could not participate in the Special Olympics because of their disabilities. The international organization was begun in 1974 by Jean Kennedy Smith with the goal of enriching the lives of the disabled by encouraging creativity through music, drama, dance, and visual arts programs. Very Special Arts mini-grants allowed the Schoolcraft Players of Redford; Fine Chimes, Farmington; students of Livonia Parents of the Visually Impaired; Wingert Center, Detroit, and FAR Conservatory in Birmingham, among others, to perform country line dances and songs like "Take Me Out to the Ball Game."

Visit Silvio Barile's secret garden

Spurred on by the disappointment of fans when the Red Wings lost the Stanley Cup last season, Silvio Barile set to work to create a cement version layer-by-layer on the back patio of his bakery in Redford.

The Cup, inscribed with names of hockey greats Gordie Howe, Delvecchio, Yzerman, Ciccarelli, Sawchuck, Federov and Constantinov, is but one of the sculptures in the garden behind Barile's home and bakery in Redford.

"The Stanley Cup is for the heart of the Red Wings fans, who go and support the Wings," said Barile. "When they lost the Cup, I said I'm going to make a Cup for them."

Barile, frequently referred to as one of the great folk artists of the era, gladly welcomes visitors to the garden, and his Redford Italian Bakery. The aroma of fresh baked bread and pizza, dished up by the slice, are pleasant distractions and another good reason to visit this treasure located right here in our own backyard.

Barile offers a free history lesson along with a tour of the sculptures of Julius Caesar, Romeo and Juliet, Romulus and Remus, St. Peter, Mt. Rushmore, Classic Roman architecture, Pope John Paul II, and Luciano Pavarotti.

Barile, 57, supplements historical perspective with his own philosophies. Many of the sculptures began as a hole in the ground. In his early work, Barile would create a negative for an iron framework before pouring Quikrete cement into the earthenmold. Sergio DeGiusti, a well-known sculptor and long-time friend, helped Barile raise the works once completed with assistance from a tow truck and jacks lent by Rent-a-Jalopy in Detroit.

"The Stanley Cup he did was pretty amazing," said DeGiusti. "Silvio is one of the great folk artists in the same league as untrained visionaries like Simon Rodia (creator of the Watts Towers in California). I was just glad we didn't have to lift this one because he gradually built it layer-by-layer on the spot where it was to remain."

Barile started making his own toys, an art in itself, while living in a concentration camp with his mother and siblings during World War II. His love of Roman history; his native town of Ausonia, Italy; five children; and religion drive him along with his love for people.

Walking through the gardens and bakery, Barile reveals concepts leading to works based on the Alamo, and other historical events, which "we should never forget."

"Knowing the past, will help the future," Barile said as he began the tour talking about "Caesar Augustus, the father of the Romans who was well-respected because of his honorable ways."

Barile's work reflects his values. He started the sculpture garden 20 years ago "to give Italians an identity and to give America a little bit of old Roman wisdom like virtue and honor."

Those are the ideals Barile is building into his latest work "The Liberty Tower." Twin castle towers symbolize virtue and honor. Once finished, Barile will top the sculpture with 75-pound bells purchased at a garage sale.

"The main message is the effect they have on life," said Barile. "It's the message of art (that's important), the meaning that guides our own existence."

"Spirit of America" speaks about relationships between men and women by portraying the Statue of Liberty standing alongside a man. It's well worth thinking about in an age when divorce continues to thrive as an alternative to communication and compromise. A divorce four years ago left Barile with a great deal to say about the subject.

"I just want man and woman to get along better than they do," said Barile. "There's such misunderstanding in our relationships. We've forgotten how to love one another."

Sachs' resignation another ripple in waves of anxiety at DIA

BY FRANK PROVENZANO
STAFF WRITER

A day after he announced his resignation as director of the Detroit Institute of Arts, Samuel Sachs II was in New York to be introduced as the new director of the prestigious Frick Collection. For Sachs, who grew up and attended graduate school in New York, it was a return home. But for Founder Society members and DIA supporters, it was deja vu all over again.

Many expressed shock along with anxiety about the institute's uncertain future. The widely held view was that Sachs couldn't have chosen a worse moment for his sudden resignation since it came at a time when the DIA, once again, faces an impending financial and political crisis.

Dianne Abel, DIA associate director of development for volunteer services/special events, wondered about the financial viability of the museum. "It's a huge loss," said Abel, a Beverly Hills resident. "He's an excellent art historian and has provided a lot of guidance."

Yet there are signs that Sachs decision to leave wasn't just a case of responding to a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity, as he referred to the Frick position. While he conceded that he was first approached by a search committee for the Frick in early January, those close to Sachs cite the Detroit City Council's December of 1996 decision to table a proposal for a nonprofit corporation to operate the DIA as the decisive event that expedited his departure.

Currently, the DIA is run by a combination of city and Founders employees. The city-owned DIA and the Founders, a private organization that raises about 70 percent of the museum's $33 million budget, have been negotiating for the Society to assume full management of the DIA.

For the most part, the Founders Society is composed of suburban residents, many of whom have deep pockets and political connections. It's expected that hundreds of thousands of dollars could be saved annually by changing the administrative structure. Opponents to the plan, however, suspect that the Founders could usurp city control of the museum.

By late March, when the council reject-

City-suburb collaboration uneasy relationship

BY FRANK PROVENZANO
STAFF WRITER

While Samuel Sachs II's decision to resign is viewed formally by DIA staffers and trustees as a "wonderful opportunity," the museum's uncertain future reveals a greater dilemma facing the collaborative relationship between city and suburbs.

The question most commonly asked is: How can the DIA, often mentioned as one of the top five museums in the country, continually fall prey to funding problems and partisan political bickering? Many point to the state's 1991 debilitating budget cuts as setting an indifferent tone about the museum, while others contend that it's indicative of the uneasy city-suburbs relationship.

One source at the DIA contends that the Detroit City Council's decision to reject any plan for the Founders taking over the DIA is a move to defend its voice in the management of the museum. But that view also is seen as nearsighted, to say the least.

"I might not renew my Founders Society membership to send a message to the City Council that we're not self-centered suburbanites who want to run the DIA," said Sergio DeGiusti, a Redford sculptor whose work has been exhibited at the museum.

"I'm sick and tired of Eight Mile Road being seen as the Berlin Wall," said Detroit Councilman Clyde Cleveland, who supports the Founders assuming the management of the DIA. Cleveland along with council members Gil Hill and Sheila Cockrel voted in the minority to support the restructuring plan.

In fact, Cleveland pointed out that 93 percent of visitors to the museum are from metro suburbs and outstate. "We have a regional art institute that's located in the heart of the region – Detroit."

Challenges at the DIA

It may take up to two years to find a replacement for Sachs. The Detroit Arts Commission, appointed by Mayor Dennis Archer, is expected to conduct an extensive search for a new director.

Meanwhile, the museum's destiny will be in the hands of those left in Sachs' wake. "It's difficult to project if (Sachs' resignation) will affect the DIA's funding woes," said Maurice Parrish, DIA deputy director who will assume the director's role when Sachs leaves in September.

"In July 1998, there will be a $7 million to $8 million shortfall in the budget. It's important we begin very, very soon to work on a solution to that problem."

Simply put, the DIA has never recovered from reduced state funding. Since 1991, shortfalls caused by cuts in state support has amounted to a deficit of $32 million. Most of the deficit will be absorbed by the special Founders Society fund-raising campaign, Partnership for Renewal. The money from that campaign, however, will be exhausted in the coming fiscal year.

Considering current funding levels, the DIA has forecasted a $1.4 million budget deficit for next year. If that trend continues, the DIA faces either more cuts in its operating budget or will have to appeal for more private funding.

"People will be more reluctant if we have to embark on another public campaign to ask them again to come up with the needed funding," said Sachs.

A possible alternative, according to Councilman Cleveland, is a tri-county millage similar to the arrangement among the counties that support the Minneapolis Institute of Arts. For such a tax to be adopted, political leaders in Macomb, Oakland and Wayne would have to see the shared benefit of sustaining and further developing the DIA.

And that, of course, would take collaboration and a broader appreciation of one the region's most cherished cultural resources.

Linda Ann Chomin contributed to this story.

ed the perfunctory step of even soliciting requests for a proposal from nonprofits to run the DIA, Sachs was probably convinced that it was time to shop for a new home in New York.

"I feel like I did a great deal for the DIA, and maybe I pushed it as far as I possibly could," said Sachs.

Indeed, since assuming the director's position in 1985, Sachs has compiled a long list of accomplishments, including doubling the Founders Society membership to 46,000, increasing the museum's endowment from $20 million to $70 million, and spearheading a fund drive that has already netted $27 million with another year remaining. A rather successful tenure, most concede, during one of the most difficult financial circumstances in the museum's 112-year history.

But Susanne Hilberry, owner of the Hilberry Gallery in Birmingham, contends that it's been commonly known on the local art scene that Sachs has been looking for another position for years.

"It could be a blessing in disguise," said Hilberry, who worked at the DIA in the mid-1970s under the contemporary arts curator. "Maybe now that we're all focusing on 'What should we do,' there's an opportunity for us to begin to see the DIA as a resource we all need to take care of."

Even Sachs conceded that his resignation could draw attention to what he calls the precarious financial state of the museum. "Maybe this will be a catalytic event," said Sachs.

"I've gotten the sense that some people just don't understand the urgency that the DIA is facing a truly perilous future," he said. "To defer the action is not solving the issue."

By next July, the DIA may face an $8 million budget shortfall. And equally distressing, if the long-term funding picture doesn't get any better the DIA board of directors will draft a contingency plan to consider a restructured, scaled-down museum run on substantially less revenue.

To many, this sounds like 1991 when the state reduced funding from $16 million to $9 million, causing museum layoffs, reduced hours and a limited exhibit schedule.

At noon Wednesday, May 28, Sachs will deliver his state of the museum report at the Detroit Arts Commission meeting, held in the DIA boardroom. The meeting is open to the public, but no questions will be taken.

responds to Michelangelo's "David."

"David was not sensual like that," said Barile. "My David was just a shepherd with some goats and sheep. Michelangelo did not give David the weapons he needed to survive. I gave my David stones to protect himself and a water jug for when he gets thirsty."

Because Barile's cement sculptures weigh tons, only photos of the works have been exhibited at the Michigan Gallery, and "Patrimonio" exhibit at Wayne State University. Barile's work was also part of the 1993 Festival of Michigan Folk Life at Michigan State University Museum. That's where John Cicala met Barile. After receiving a frantic phone call in New York from the Michigan State University Museum, Cicala flew to the folk festival to serve as an interpreter of Barile's work. It seems some folks lacking knowledge of art traditions needed guidance. That intrigued Cicala who tracks and documents folk arts. After taking more than 500 photographs of Barile's work, and doing 20 to 30 hours of interviews, Cicala recently completed a Web page on Italian-American life and artists such as Barile for the Internet.

"Silvio is a simple baker who developed this style in a concentration camp during his childhood," said Cicala, who earned a doctorate in folklore and American studies from Indiana University. "Silvio's a folklorist, meaning that in order to understand his art, you have to understand the man and his life. It's not like Impressionism or Expressionism that has a certain set of rules.

"What attracts people to Silvio's work is the size, they're huge, and the complexity. You can sit and stare at it all day and see something new all the time."

An art exhibit, displayed off the Center Court, featured drawing, collage and portraits by Very Special Artists from Birmingham, Southfield, West Bloomfield, Farmington Hills, and the Pontiac-based Hope Network, S.E.

Heather Tiffany, communications and development coordinator for Hope Network, S.E. was grateful for the Very Special Arts mini-grant that allowed the nonprofit organization to initiate a therapeutic art program.

"Because of funding there was never an opportunity for the expression of this built-up talent that no one's ever seen before," said Tiffany.

Art activity tables placed at the back of the performing area provided participants and the public a chance to try their hand at creating visual art. Crayons and construction paper provided the key to open the doors to their imaginations.

There is nothing more rewarding than helping a child or adult with disabilities make art. The smile you receive in return, sends the heart soaring. For the last four years, I've gained more than I've given by volunteering to work in the art activities area at the Very Special Arts Festival at Wonderland Mall in Livonia.

During this time, I learned that we all have abilities when it comes to art, it's only a matter of degree. For some, the finished product is everything. For others, it's not the art you make that counts, but participating in the process to whatever degree.

Just ask Canton Township artist Gwen Dietrich. Last weekend, she volunteered to help children and adults with disabilities make birds from construction paper. Dietrich thinks artists as well as others could learn a lot by taking time out from their busy schedules to volunteer at the festival.

"Sharing an activity with a little blind girl made me realize how difficult and limited the world is for people with visual impairments," said Dietrich, "but my guidance and reassurance enriched her life. Unknowingly to her, she enriched mine."

BOOKS

'Life Without Bessie' sad, but worth living

On My Own at 107
By Sarah L. Delany with Amy Hill Hearth
(HarperSanFrancisco, $18)

BY KEELY WYGONIK
STAFF WRITER

Death and change are perhaps two of the hardest things to accept. They were for Miss Sadie Delany, who at 107 is learning to live without her sister, Dr. Bessie Delany, who died peacefully in her sleep Sept. 25, 1995, at the age of 104.

Only two years apart, the sisters spent a lifetime together. In 1993 they became celebrities, at age 104 and 102, when "Having Our Say: The Delany Sisters' First 100 years," written with Amy Hill Hearth, the New York Times reporter who discovered them in 1991, became a best-seller. The book adapted to stage, was a hit on Broadway, and is playing Music Hall Center for Performing Arts in Detroit.

"The Delany Sisters' Book of Everyday Wisdom," followed in 1994. "On My Own at 107: Reflections on Life Without Bessie," with Amy Hill Hearth, is Miss Sadie's joyful tribute to her sister. Watercolor illustrations of flowers from Bessie's garden by Brian M. Kotzky are sprinkled throughout.

"You'd think we were Siamese twins who couldn't live without each other! Well, I'm learning that I am a separate human being. For the first time I'm learning that," writes Miss Sadie.

"Life Without Bessie," like other Delany books, is witty, and full of good advice. Miss Sadie's struggle to pick up the pieces, and start living after the death of her sister, is one we'll all have to face.

"We all wish that things could stay the same, but they won't," she writes. "We all wish we could live forever, but we can't. I wonder what it is about life that makes us cling to it so, especially since the world can be so cruel sometimes."

Born on the campus of Saint Augustine's School (now College) in Raleigh, North Carolina, the 10 Delany children were protected, loved, taught to believe and trust in God, and "aim high."

Their father, Henry Beard Delany, was born into slavery, but became the first elected black Episcopal bishop in the United States. Nanny Logan Delany, their mother, was born free to a white man and his life-long partner, a woman of color. Mr. Delany met his wife at Saint Augustine's, and they raised their children there.

All 10 Delanys graduated from Saint Augustine's, and worked their way through college. Bessie graduated in 1923 from Columbia University's School of Dental and Oral Surgery, becoming the second black woman licensed to practice dentistry in New York. Sadie, attended Pratt Institute and later Columbia University to pursue a teaching degree. She also earned a master's, at Columbia, and in 1925 was the first black woman to teach domestic science (home economics) on the high school level, in New York. They never married because in those days it meant giving up your career.

In Harlem the Delany siblings, who remained close all their lives, were part of an elite circle within the black community in the 1920s and 1930s. Later, the sisters moved to the Bronx, and to a two-story house in Mount Vernon, New York, in 1957 where Miss Sadie lives today. "Life Without Bessie," is not about dying, it's about learning to live without someone you love, while cherishing their memory.

Faith in God, exercise, eating lots of fruits and vegetables, no smoking, and taking vitamins, are some of the reasons the Delany Sisters give for their longevity. It also runs in their family.

She gives credit to her parents for the way she was raised. "We didn't have any money as a family, growing up, but we learned good habits, how to take care of ourselves properly."

At 107, Miss Sadie is looking forward, while treasuring the past.

"Somewhere along the line I made up my mind I'm going to live, Bessie. I guess I probably don't have that much longer on this Earth, but I may as well make the best of it ... Remember how I used to say, 'Life is short, and it's up to you to make it sweet? Well, I was wrong about the short part. But I still believe it's up to each person to make the best life, to keep trying, no matter what. A lot of it is how you look at it. A lot of it is attitude.

"Don't worry about me Sister Bessie. Child, I've got plans."

William D. Murrell, principal of Oak Park High School, and one of the Delany Sisters' nephews, visited Miss Sadie during Easter break. "She still takes her vitamins, and was alert, and talkative," he said. Miss Sadie will celebrate her 108th birthday Sept. 19.

"Having Our Say," will be presented 2 p.m. today at Music Hall Center for the Performing Arts, 350 Madison, Detroit. Tickets $23.50 to $38.50, are available at the box office (313) 963-2366.

Writer explores his love affair with basketball

To the Hoop: Seasons of a Basketball Life
By Ira Berkow
(Harper BasicBooks)

BY BRAD EMONS
STAFF WRITER

If you've ever played any amount of competitive hoop in your life, then Ira Berkow's "To The Hoop: Seasons of a Basketball Life," (Basic Books) is a mandatory assignment.

The New York Times sports columnist and Pulitzer Prize finalist weaves you through a course of basketball and life that a pick-up player should find appealing.

Even at the age of 56 and with a reconstructed knee, Berkow, continues to chase the "Holy Grail" when it comes to being a gym rat.

And he will go to just about any lengths to keep his dream alive.

The son of immigrant parents from Chicago's west side, Berkow recreates the book version of "Hoop Dreams," the award-winning documentary.

His journey begins on the playgrounds and continues through his trials and tribulations as an adolescent.

Unlike many scribes, Berkow can not only write about the game but also play it as well. He can relate to the struggles of playing both high school and college hoops, but he also gives the readers a truly insightful and humorous view, as well as the nuances, of becoming an effective pick-up player.

The opening chapter, titled "Home Courts," will leave you in stitches as he becomes attached to a cast of characters he encounters at the Vanderbilt YMCA gym in Manhatten.

Going on a nickname basis only, Berkow's most colorful writing and witty tales deal with the likes of Roach, Monster, Animal, Charlie Miron, Fuzz, Sly and J.J and Kenny Garcia.

He also exchanges elbows on the court with Oscar Robertson, tries to set up an elusive one-on-one matchup with former New York governor Mario Cuomo, and copes with the meteoric improvement of his best friend and high school teammate Stuart Menaker, who ultimately surpasses Berkow as a player.

Berkow also trades basketball anedotes with the likes of the "Big O," Magic Johnson, Isiah Thomas, Red Holzman, Walt Frazier, Steve Kerr, Mark Aguirre and Michael Jordan.

The book covers the gamut when it comes to hoops, but it also inflicts a dose of reality as Berkow comes to grips and later reconciliation, after a lenghty period of estrangement from his younger brother Tom, who undergoes treatment for cancer.

Unfortunately, Berkow throws up a few bricks midway through the 285-page book when he exposes his life through his loves and marriages.

But like any good shooter, Berkow is able to gain his rhythm back in time and come back with a flurry in the fourth and decisive quarter.

He is to be commended, however, for being a straight shooter when it comes to revealing intimate details, not only about his family, but his own failings and shortcomings.

And Berkow is to be admired for accepting personal challenges when it comes to playing pick-up basketball.

A sparkling court on a beautiful day in Laguna Beach, Calif., turns nightmarish for Berkow, who becomes nearly haunted by experience.

But like any competitor, Berkow casts away his middle-aged doubts and makes a triumphant return to the scene of the crime.

He even gives this retired cager, now turned marathoner, food for thought about making a comeback, bad back and all.

Ira Berkow is a senior writer and sports columnist for the New York Times and author of over a dozen books, including Rockin' Steady: A Guide to Basketball and Cool (with Walt Frazier), along with the national best-seller Red: A Biography of Red Smith. He was born in Chicago in 1940 and graduated from Miami University of Ohio and from the Medill School of Journalism at Northwestern. He was recently named 'New York's Best Sportswriter' by New York Magazine. He lives with his wife, Dolly, of New York City.

Mountain bike guide takes you to the best Michigan trails

Mountain Biking Michigan: The Best Trails in Southern Michigan
by Dwain Abramowski and Sandra Davison (Pegg Legg Publications, Thunder Bay Press, $13.95)

BY HUGH GALLAGHER
STAFF WRITER

The Thunder Bay Press series of bicycle books goes off road again for this excellent guide to the best places to splash, jump, leap, climb, twist and turn on your mountain bike in southern Michigan.

The Thunder Bay books are invaluable to anyone who bicycles. Two books by Karen Gentry cover the best road trips in the western and eastern Lower Peninsula (with humorous stops at several eating places) and Mike Terrell covers off road mountain bike trails in the northern Lower Peninsula.

This new book is perfect for choosing a weekend or late afternoon ride close to home. Abramowski and Davison give some tips on how and when to ride and then give riders a choice of 41 exciting trail systems.

The authors rate the trails from easy to strenuous, tell which trails are good for family outings and which are better for hard core stump jumpers. The book also includes good directions on how to get to the trails, photos, detailed maps of the trails, distances and a twists and turns description of each trail. You know what you're getting into when you read these guide books.

Best of all, these trails are close to home. The authors describe the trail system at Bald Mountain as the most scenic in Oakland County, offering more than 15 miles "past a dozen small lakes, marshy ponds and over gurgling Spring Creek." Other near to home trails include Addison Oaks, Ortonville, Maybury, Highland and Pontiac Lake.

For Pontiac Lake the writers give fair warning: "The route is noted for it roots and rocks. Most riders will find the network challenging in its obstacles and speed. Pay attention or such obstacles can hurt you. There are several notable climbs; some are steep, some are loose and some are both loose and steep. Some of the hills have earned nicknames like Little Puke, so time your pre-ride meals." Despite all this the writers inform us that the trail is so popular that on weekends it's often packed with riders by mid-morning.

The book also covers areas in western and central Michigan perfect for weekend getaways. The book covers the area south of the Pentwater-Tawas line.

Every bike pack in Michigan should have one of these guides along for the ride.

EXHIBITION EXTENDED

The Detroit Institute of Arts has extended the "Images in Ivory: Precious Objects of the Gothic Age" exhibition through Sunday, May 25 at the museum, 5200 Woodward Avenue in Detroit.

Admission is $5 adults; $2 children/students; Founders Society members, free, and includes museum admission and a Acoustiguide recorded tour narrated by Susan Stamberg, National Public Radio special correspondent. The exhibit is free on Wednesdays with a donation for museum admission.

According to exhibition curator Peter Barnet, "visitors have expressed amazement at the extraordinary quality of carving on such small ivory figures. And people seem to particularly enjoy experiencing daily life in the Gothic Age represented in each work- from how people prayed to how they combed their hair."

"Images in Ivory" features 100 examples of medieval ivory carving in a setting that includes gothic arches and windows, recordings of period music and a reading room. Many of the works were loaned by the world's greatest museums including the Louvre in Paris; Victoria & Albert Museum, London, and Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City. The exhibit will travel to only one other site, the Walters Art Gallery in Baltimore (June 22 to Aug. 31), before the objects are returned to the various lending institutions.

DIA hours are 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Wednesday through Friday, and until 5 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. Call (313) 833-7900.

THROUGH THE LOOKING GLASS

A new exhibition by sculptor Fred Sandback opened May 17 at the University of Michigan Museum of Art, 525 South State Street, Ann Arbor, (313) 764-0395. Admission is free.

Most people think of sculpture as being created from clay, metal or wood. But for Sandback, acrylic yarn is the sculptural equivalent of #2 pencil. With a spectrum of colored yarn pulled taut from ceiling to floor, Sandback carves huge columns and room-sized structures from ordinary space. His simple strands become the edges of imaginary planes and volumes- a bristling geometry nearly transparent and weightless.

Sandback's work confounds expectations and opens minds to a new way of seeing. Using line alone, Sandback induces viewers to experience the space anew, to mentally or physically cross through the diaphanous plane much as Alice went through the looking glass.

Sandback tackled the U-M museum's Apse this spring, tying and tethering string to the architectural members of this usually bold, bright and busy space, changing it into something new and mysterious.

The exhibition continues through Sept. 28. Hours are 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday to Saturday, until 9 p.m. Thursday, and noon to 5 p.m. Sunday.

SHOW CANCELED

The Friends of Nankin Mills regrets to announce their annual "Spring Elegance" arts and craft show scheduled Sunday, June 1 in Edward Hines Park will not be held.

The annual show raised funds for the restoration of Nankin Mills and the addition of a nature center, tentatively scheduled for completion in 18 months.

"With the number of craft shows out there at this time of year, it was difficult to get crafters," said Denise Johnston, Friends president. "We may do the show in fall 1998."

In the meantime, the Friends are looking at different ways to raise funds. Their annual wine and cheese reception will still be held the last Wednesday in September.

"We're always looking for volunteers whether it's an artist who might want to arrange flowers at the wine and cheese reception, or just help out in general," said Johnston.

For more information about the Friends of Nankin Mills, call Johnston at (313) 261-3633, or Kathy Myers (313) 421-7213.

YOUNG PIANIST HONORED

Joshua H. Cullen was one of three citizens honored by Wayne County Executive Edward H. McNamara during a breakfast May 16 at Burton Manor.

Nearly 2,000 people attended the Winning Ways Awards, a celebration of community spirit to honor extraordinary citizens of Wayne County. The sense of purpose and dedication of these three citizens has led to the progress of Wayne County and the enrichment of the lives of the people who live there.

Cullen began studying piano at five. At age eight, he made his debut performing with the Livonia Symphony Orchestra. Now 12, Cullen has performed in concert halls as far away as Italy, Vienna, Moscow, and Prague. Blessed with determination most adults only dream of, he remains levelheaded and upbeat, an example of what others can achieve through hard work.

William Clay Ford, Jr. and Margaret Piper were also honored with awards.

EXPERIENCING JAZZ

Albion College student Julie P. White is gaining experience in jazz performance by playing with the College's Jazz Ensemble.

White, a junior majoring in biology, is the daughter of James and Patricia White of Westland and a graduate of Churchill High School in Livonia.

The Jazz Ensemble presents several concerts throughout the year, as well as performing during the Homecoming0 Collage Concert and spring Children's Concert. "It's a valuable opportunity for students to try challenging music and use their musical talents in different ways," said department chair Myron McReynolds, who directs the Ensemble.

Painter does mural justice at new courthouse

BY FRANK PROVENZANO
STAFF WRITER

Two carpenters, carrying a long wooden plank, share a good laugh as they pass the scaffold where painter Robert Schefman is working. Atop a platform about six feet above the sawdust-laden marble tile, he holds a fistful of brushes in one hand, and a single brush in the other.

Schefman of West Bloomfield is painting delicate facial lines and skin tones of the people included in his massive mural in the lobby of the newly constructed 19th District Court in Dearborn.

"Watch out," yelled one carpenter, nodding in the direction of the scaffold.

"Hey, so he adds an extra wrinkle," laughed the other carpenter, feigning like he's shaking the ladder. "What's the big deal?"

Schefman smiled boyishly. "It's combat around here."

Then, as if the carpentry troops had taken up arms there was a sudden cacophony of drills, saws, hammering and monosyllabic yelling. The abrasive noise mingled in peculiar harmony with the country music reverberating through the hallways.

It's a setting closer to painting along with the Three Stooges than contemplating a lasting allegory for the halls of justice. Yet Schefman perseveres.

While his impressive figurative paintings have been critical successes over the last 10 years, Schefman's artistry is by no means limited to the canvas. If there's an embodiment of a blood and guts, hell-bent for his art artist, he's it.

"He doesn't just attack a canvas, he becomes immersed in it," said Darlene Carroll, director of the Lemberg Gallery in Birmingham, which represents Schefman. "He has a strong following. Part of that is because he grew up in the area, but his work appeals anywhere."

Widely known for his paintings that offer contemporary interpretations of classic Greek myths, Schefman's obsession for his subjects and mastery of technique place him among the finest painters working in the realistic tradition. At 44, he no longer thinks in terms of a "big break" or a watershed exhibit.

"It's a building process," he said. "You just keep working at it. If the public responds, that's wonderful. If not, you still go on with your work."

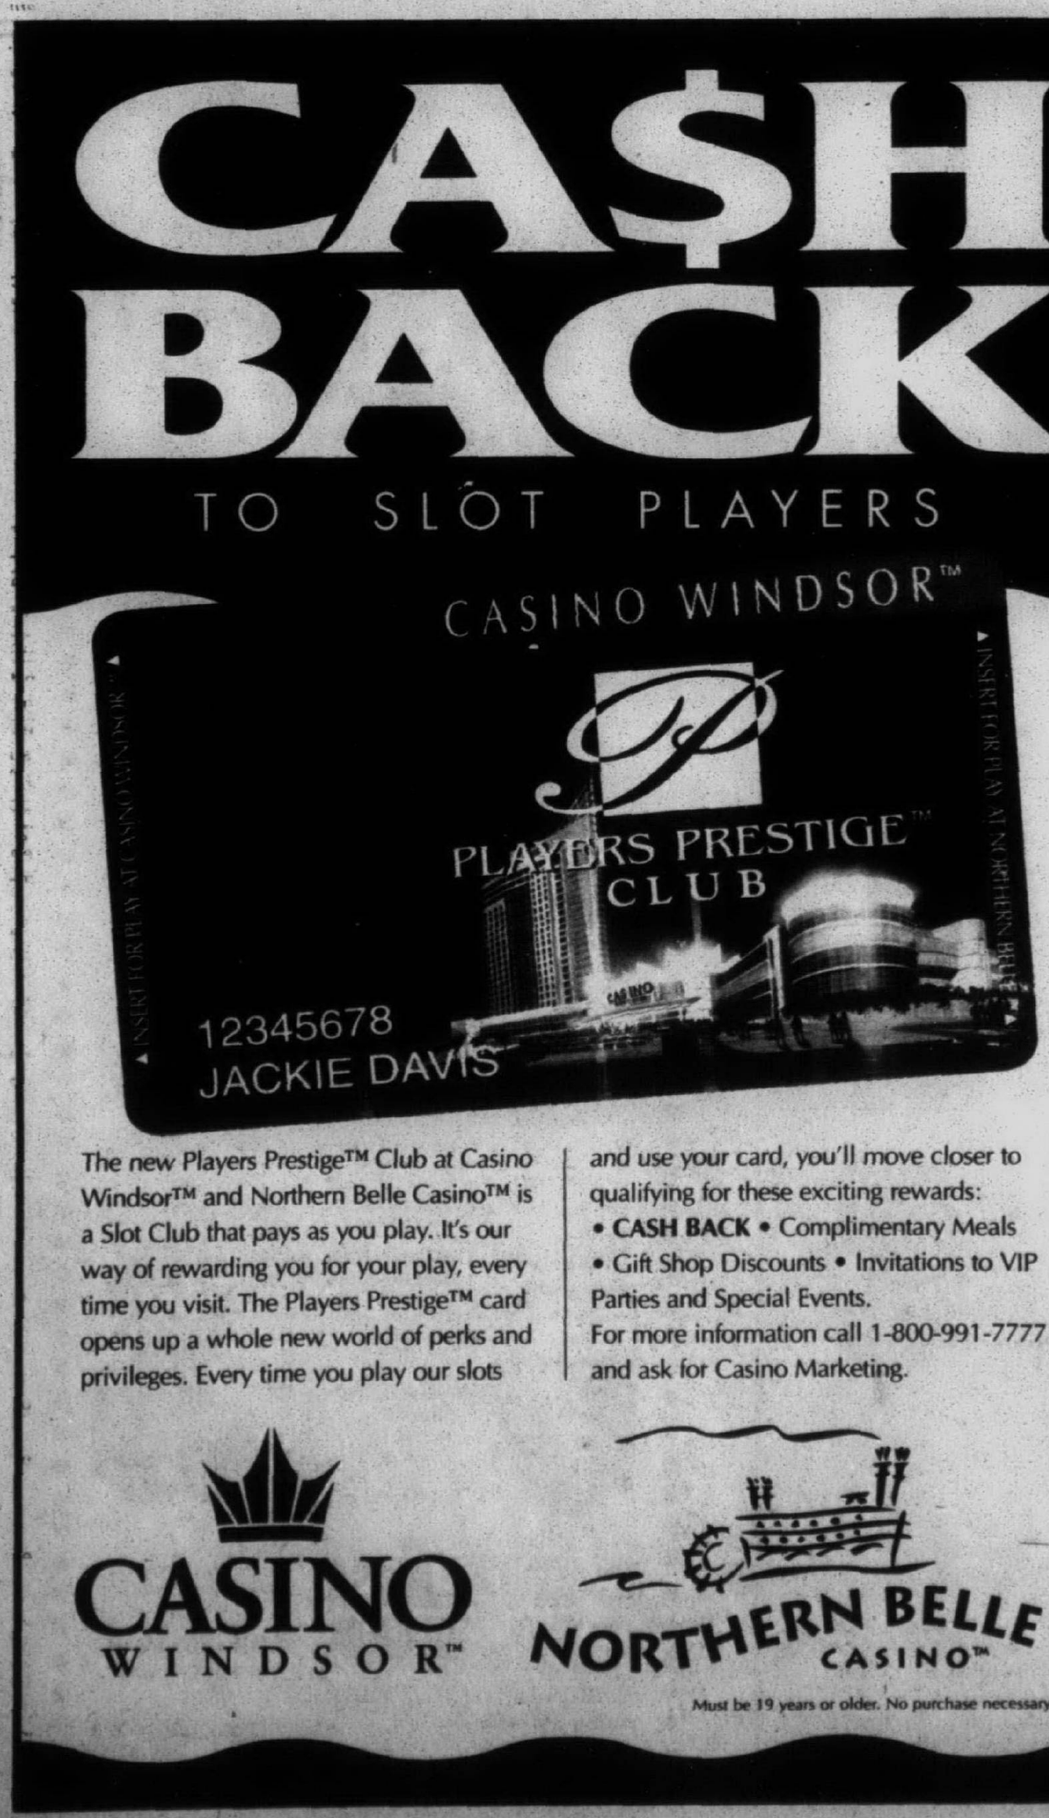

A classic story of equality

When architects suggested that perhaps a painting could fill the 48-foot wall in the 19th District Court entrance, Chief District Court Judge William Runco realized it was the ideal place for "meaningful art." Runco is overseeing the construction of the $8 million expanded court building expected to add 35,000 square feet to one of the busiest courts in the state.

"Public buildings should have some enduring monument," said Runco. "People will come to the court and be in awe looking at the expressions of the people in the mural. They look as if they could've been at the signing of Declaration of Independence."

Whenever art is created for a public place, the most often-asked question is: What will be appropriate? Unlike many artists who either appeal to the lowest common denominator or ignore mainstream sensibilities, Schefman's view is refreshingly realistic without being compromising.

"In 'public art,' you present an experience for everyone," he said. That "open-ended experience" is enhanced by Schefman's design for the curved mural wall, which includes 30 faces of Dearborn residents as characters participating in a story about the citizenry role in the due process of law. On one side are those engaged in the discussion about the nature of law. On the other side are the "common people" who sit in judgment of their fellow citizens.

Tour host believes in knowing Italy before you go

BY HUGH GALLAGHER
STAFF WRITER

Anria Del Pizzo believes in careful preparation.

As a teacher of Italian, Del Pizzo has been spreading the word on Italian culture for 20 years. Now she is introducing people to Italy first hand, by leading tour groups. But before they go, Del Pizzo makes sure they are prepared to understand what they see.

She prepares a study guide for her tourists (Amici di Anria, Friends of Anria). She gives lectures, shows slides, gives behind the scenes information.

A Del Pizzo study guide includes more than an itinerary. The guide includes an explanation of the European Economic Community, a metric conversion table, a summary of Italian history, diagrams of famous buildings, articles on local cuisine and pertinent maps.

"I try to make visuals, so they know where everything is. I try to make you feel Italy in your soul," she said.

Del Pizzo, of Northville, already has Italy in her soul. She teaches privates Italian classes, has taught Italian at Wayne State, Oakland Community College and is president of the Michigan Chapter of the American Association of Teachers of Italians.

Her parents were born in Italy and as a child she often returned to Italy and attended school there. She attended the University of Florence and her son Marco attended the University of Pisa and her other son, Dante, will be attending Pisa this summer.

Her husband, Ferdinando, is also of Italian descent and helps with the study program by preparing Italian meals for the group at the monthly meetings held before the trips.

Kate Shishkovsky of Livonia said those meetings made fast friends of the travelers and the study guides "helped an awful lot" in increasing understanding of what the travelers would see.

"Those monthly meetings we had were fun but we also had interesting things to learn," she said.

This year, Del Pizzo is leading two trips to Italy. The first, Aug. 26 to Sept. 4, will explore Venice, Milan, Verona, Portofino and Cinque Terra. The highlight will be a production of Verdi's "Rigoletto" at the Roman Amphitheatre in Verona and side trips to "Romeo and Juliet" sites in the city. A fall trip, Sept. 29 to Oct. 9, will include Milan, Venice and the Italian Riviera.

Her "Know Before You Go" sessions begin at 7 p.m. Tuesday. Group size is limited to 12. For information, call Del Pizzo at (810)474-4519.

Past trips over the last three years have included Rome, Florence and Milan.

"My favorite city is Florence. It's my home city but also it has so much art and history," she said.

The first year she led a group, her cousin in Florence, Alberta Sassetti, invited everyone to dinner for an Italian feast. The group sampled local cuisine and a variety of Italian wines.

Del Pizzo tries to find these special, human touches and avoids the obvious tourist destinations, unless they are absolute musts. Then she gives her touring friends an insider's view.

"In Venice everybody rides the gondolas, but we learn about the history of gondolas," she said. "Venice is a water city, but we learn why and how."

Each student learns some Italian, so they can get by.

"I teach my students buzz phrases. By using 'Where is ...' They can look up in the dictinary and find where they want to go," she said.

"Italians appreciate anyone who tries to speak the language and they try to help."

For the trip to Verona, travelers will learn about opera, Roman amphitheatres and the legend of Romeo and Juliet.

Del Pizzo said the Verona Amphitheatre is as large as the Roman Coliseum and still in tact. Each evening before the opera, everyone lights a candle.

"Verona is beautiful, known for its pink marble, there is a pink tinge over the whole city," Del Pizzo said.

Romeo and Juliet sights will include the balcony, Juliet's home and her tomb.

Those who have traveled with Del Pizzo are most grateful for the friendships they've forged.

"Our experience in going to Italy with Anria's group was wonderful. We all became fast friends and the friendship has continued for almost two years. We have three or four dinners together a year in one of our homes," write Donna and Paul Trupiano of Dearborn. "The trip itself was outstanding. Italy is a wonderful country: the people, culture, art, beauty are intriguing. For us, we also visited family and that was a most precious gift."

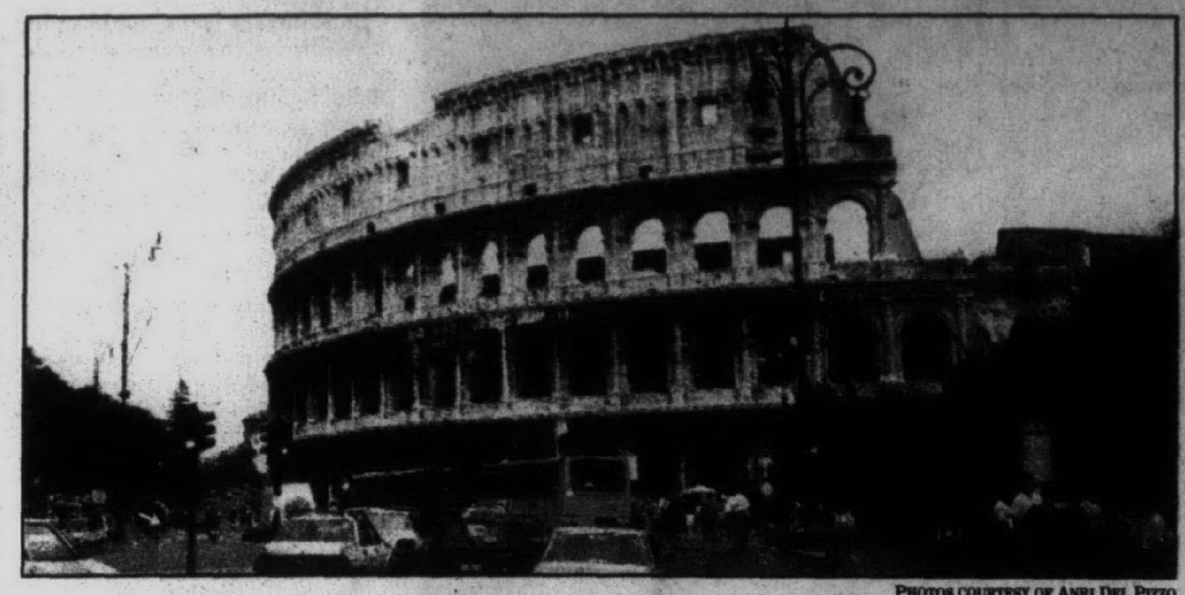

Shishkovsky also enjoyed the camaraderie.

"I like art and art history and I just thought Rome was fabulous," said Shishkovsky. She said the highlights for her, in addition to the friendships she made, were St. Peter's Bascilica and the Parthenon in Rome.

Daniel Lenzi of Novi discovered that the Lenzi family of Florence has a long and noble tradition. Del Pizzo said he spent hours researching the history of the family, though he still isn't certain that he is related to these Lenzis.

Lenzi and his wife, Andrea, also sent their recommendation: "We never expected that we would form lasting friendships with the others on our trip to Italy. We are sure that it was mainly due to the small size of the group. Also, the sessions we had at Anria's house prior to leaving helped us get acquainted with the others.

"Then top it all off by sharing a special experience like our trip to Rome and Florence which solidified our friendship with the others. We have had five or six dinners together over the past year and a half. This has been a real bonus."

Return to Yesteryear on a national treasure

(NAPS) – Nothing can compare to the experience of lazily drifting past sleepy river towns aboard a luxurious steamboat that Mark Twain would have been proud to serve on as a captain.

From the moment you step aboard the legendary Delta Queen, you enter a world far removed from today's fast-paced society. Time seems suspended on the steamboat, this year celebrating her 70th birthday and her 50th anniversary on America's heartland rivers.

Designated as a National Historic Landmark, the Delta Queen is a one-of-a-kind star-spangled slice of Americana, featuring Tiffany-style stained glass windows, gleaming brass fittings and rich polished wood.

The Delta Queen features elegant public areas and a dramatic grand staircase, crowned by an elegant crystal chandelier. Cabins and staterooms continue the theme of old-fashioned elegance, making a river voyage as comfortable as a stay at a Victorian bed-and-breakfast.

Free airfare is available as an early booking bonus for most cruises reserved and deposited eight months before departure.

Rocks rule at regional

BY BRAD EMONS
STAFF WRITER

The weather was lousy.

A steady rain and bone-chilling temperatures made conditions less than ideal for Friday night's Class A girls track regional at Redford Union's Kraft Field.

But that didn't matter to Plymouth Salem, which ran away with the first-place team trophy, scoring 143 points to unseat defending champion Detroit Cass Tech, which finished with 97. Livonia Stevenson finished a strong third with 85 3/4.

Salem parlayed five firsts and scored in 14 of 15 events to win their first regional crown since 1993.

"I thought if the weather was going to be a factor, the meet would be in our favor," Salem 10th-year coach Mark Gregor said. "Our athletes aren't bothered by the elements.

"Our team motto all year has been, 'Commitment to compete,' and our girls have bought into that.

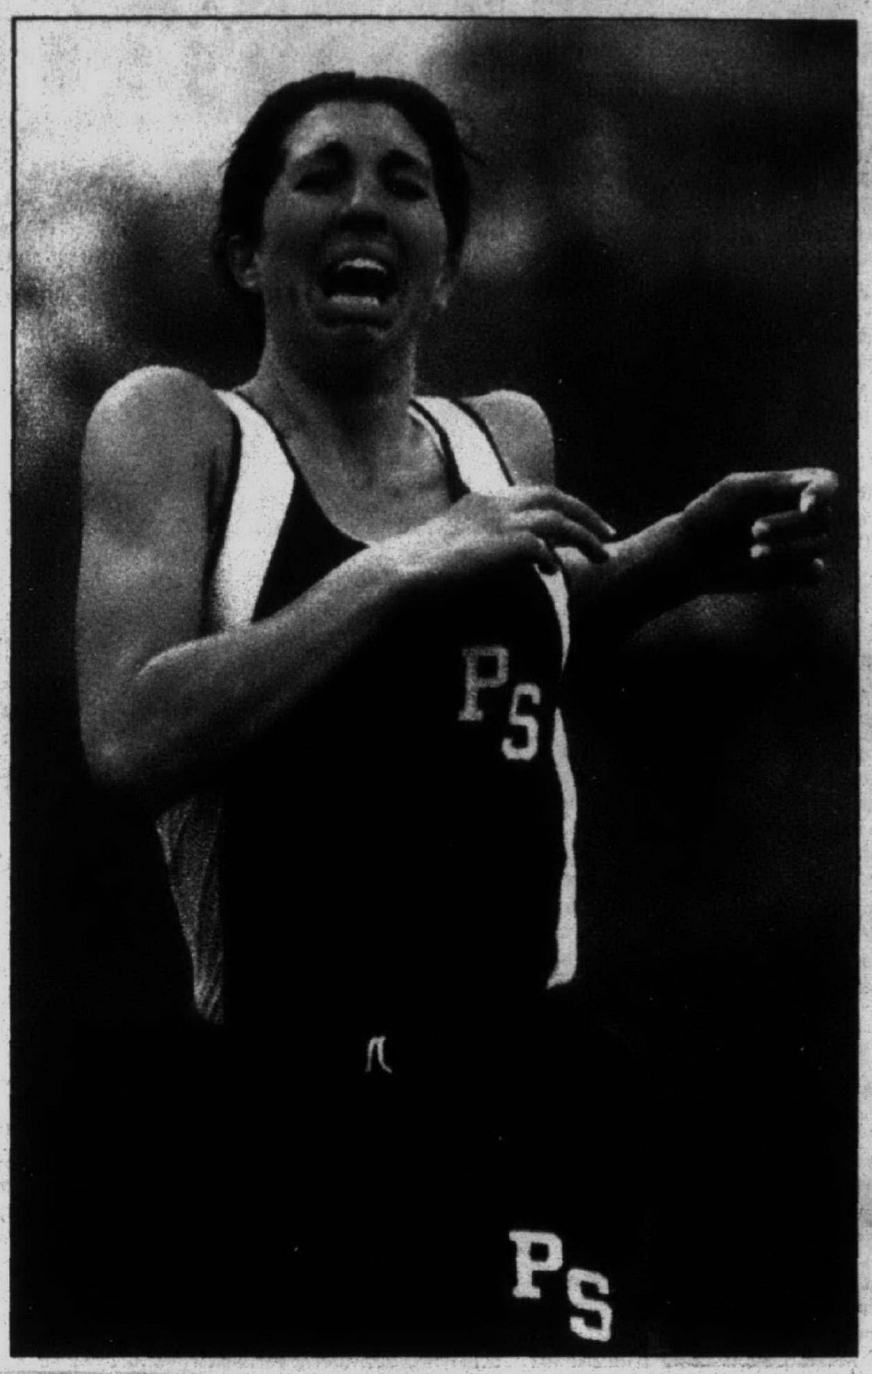

"And ever since our dual meet Tuesday with Stevenson (a 69-59 Salem win), our girls have been geared up for this meet."

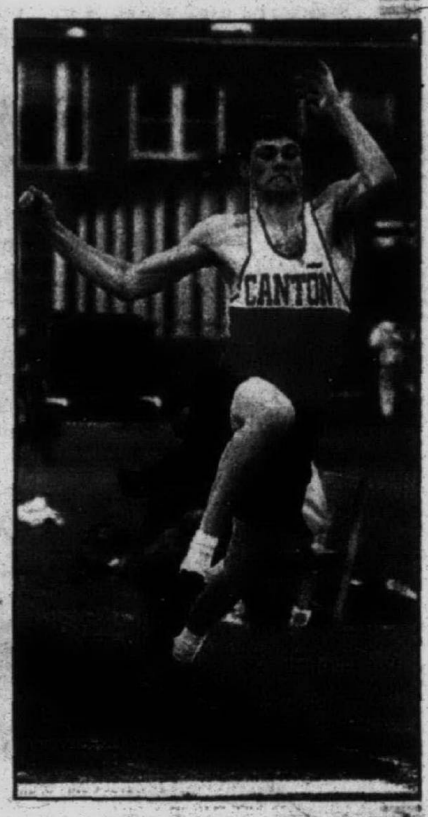

The Rocks were certainly solid in the field events, scoring 55 points.

"If we were anywhere near 60 in the field events, I knew it would be a catalyst for the rest of the meet," Gregor said. "We've managed to put together a team that is solid in every event. We've been able to combine that with a competitive attitude, determination and athletic ability to get us to this point."

Individual regional champions for Salem in the field events included Jessica Ash (shot put) and Tiffany Grubaugh (discus). The Rocks will also be sending Kristin Kosik (high jump), Angela Sillmon (long jump) and Angela Smith (discus) to the state meet.

Please see GIRLS TRACK, D3

Great efforts: Both Salem and Canton got some superb performances from their boys and girls teams at Friday state regionals. Salem's Evelyn Rahhal (left) finished third in the 1,600-meter run, narrowly missing the state qualifying standard. Canton's Jason Meagrow (below) was fourth in the long jump with a leap of 20-feet, 2 1/4 inches — again shy of the needed distance. Salem's girls finished first.

Canton runners clipped

Plymouth Canton concluded its dual-meet season in, unfortunately, typical fashion, losing 73-64.

The Chiefs were 1-5 overall in duals, 1-4 in the Western Lakes Activities Association. Four of those dual losses were by less than 10 points.

Kevin Keil led Canton with individual wins in the discus (148-feet, 5-inches) and shot put (45-8).

Other winners for the Chiefs were Jason Meagrow in the long jump (19-9 1/2), Dave Koshizawa in the 100-meters (16.4), Jon Page in the 400 (53.8), Jerry Reynolds in the 1,600 (4:50.04) and their 400 (46.0) and 1,600 (3:38.1) relays.

Next up for Canton: the WLAA finals, Tuesday at Livonia Churchill.

Holmes honored

The honors keep pouring in for Kelly Holmes.

The Plymouth Canton graduate has led University of Michigan into the NCAA Regional Softball Tournament; on Friday, she blanked Cleveland State 1-0, her 30th win of the season (against five losses) and her ninth shutout.

It also gives Holmes, a senior, the U-M career record for victories, with 73 (and counting).

Last Tuesday at the U-M softball banquet, Holmes — who stepped in after the Wolverines' No. 1 pitcher, Sara Griffin, suffered a season-ending injury — was given the team's outstanding pitcher and outstanding player awards.

Earlier, Holmes was chosen for the all-Big Ten team and was named the conference's pitcher of the year.

Ocelot golfer earns berth

Schoolcraft College freshman Brad Villa finished 10th National Junior College Athletic Association Region 12 tournament (May 11-12 in Marysville, Ohio) to earn a spot in next month's NJCAA Championships in Pinehurst, N.C.

Villa had rounds of 82, 78 and 83 for a three-day total of 243 en route to All-Region 12 honors.

Lake Michigan's Byde Kephart was medalist with a 236.

Schoolcraft finished tied for fourth with Kalamazoo Valley with a 1,110 total.

The first three teams include Muskegon (967), Oakland (983) and Lansing (1,000).

Other Schoolcraft scorers included Dan Gourlay, 83-85-84/252; Andy Baron, 81-86-86/253; Brian Gabbeart, 84-90-88/262; and Erik Gustaf, 96-93-92/281.

Builders roll

The Portland Builders improved their record to 2-0 in the Plymouth Men's Modified Fast-Pitch Softball League with a 10-0 five-inning mercy win over Ludwig Karas Wednesday at Central Middle School.

Jason Lichtman led the Portland offense with three hits in three trips, including a two-run home run. Dave Brubaker added a three-run homer, and Johnny Longridge, Pat Malzone and Curt Richards each contributed two hits, with Richards knocking in a run.

Richards also was the winning pitcher, allowing three hits and a walk, with three strikeouts, in five innings.

Hockey registration

The Plymouth Rockets (over 20) and Silver Sticks (over 40) hockey leagues are now accepting registrations for their summer leagues.

There will be one game a week for 10 weeks, starting June 18, in each league, played at Compuware Arena in Plymouth. Game days are Wednesday and Thursday.

For registration forms, call John Wilson at (810) 471-0658.

Sand volleyball

The Liberty Fest Sand Volleyball Tournament, sponsored by the Canton Parks and Recreation Services, will begin at 10 a.m. Sunday, June 22 at the Heritage Park sand volleyball court, located behind softball field No. 2.

Cost for the co-ed tournament is $30 per team; there are no residency requirements. Price includes T-shirts for all participants and an award to the winning team.

Registration deadline is June 12. Call (313) 397-5110 for further details.

Salem boys place 3rd; Searcy wins 800

BY BRAD EMONS
STAFF WRITER

Seventy-eight points was the magic number Friday night for Westland John Glenn as the Rockets captured the Class A regional boys track title at rainy Redford Union's Kraft Field.

It was the first regional crown for coach Jess Shough, who was an assistant coach the last time Glenn, led by middle distance standout Carl Lowe, won the crown (1989 at West Bloomfield).

Detroit Chadsey was second with 60 1/2 points and Plymouth Salem was third with 57.

Two Livonia schools, Franklin and Churchill, made strong and surprising showings, taking fourth and fifth, respectively, with 48 and 46 points.

"I was confident if we got the breaks, we'd be in the running," Shough said. "Even with all the speed coming from the Detroit schools, I felt if we scored enough points in the field events, we could neutralize that."

Glenn four-year varsity performer Mike Samples, despite the damp and chilly conditions, came through with a first in the discus (158 feet, 6 inches) and a second in the shot put (behind Observerland and regional champ Ron Pennington of Wayne Memorial).

The 6-foot-1, 185-pound Samples bettered his personal bests by at least 2 feet in each event.

Junior Harden James won a fast 100 in 10.9, and then teamed up with Reggie Spearmon, Steve Hester Aaron Stephens to win the 400 relay (44.7).

All told, Glenn scored in 12 of 16 events and held on despite being shut out in the meet's final four events.

Murinas gets past regional field

For most of this spring, things have fallen into place for Plymouth Salem's golf team.

And throughout it all, no single component has been more consistent than Katie Collins. Together with Katie Murinas, Salem has been blessed with a one-two punch few other schools in the state can match.

But, as Rocks' coach Rick Wilson summarized after Friday's 18-team Class A regional tournament at Oak Pointe in Brighton, "It wasn't meant to be apparently."

Both Collins and Salem suffered through sub-par days, Collins shooting a 96 and Salem finishing fifth.

The top three teams advance to the Class A final, May 30-31 at Forest Akers West in East Lansing.

The top five individual finishers at the regional not associated with teams that advanced to the state final also qualified for the state tournament. Murinas was one of them; she finished tied for fifth overall with an 81.

Salem scored a 395, with Jessica Hedges shooting a 95, Collins a 96 and Julie Licata a 116. Three weeks ago at the Brighton Invitational, played at Oak Pointe, Collins shot an 81.

"She's been our most consistent golfer all year, but she just didn't have a good day," said Wilson.

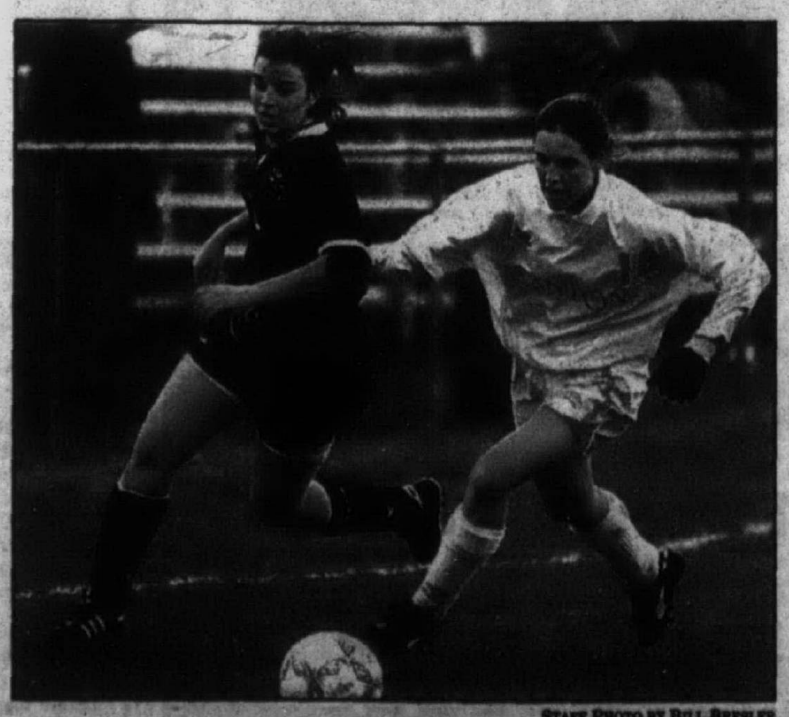

"It's disappointing for Katie (Collins). My hope is she'll bounce back next week and have a great round at the (Western Lakes Activities Association) conference tourna-

Fair is fair.

And what happened in the Western Lakes Activities Association championship soccer match Thursday at Plymouth Canton was certainly just.

After 150 minutes of nothing — at least on the scoreboard — from either team (they played to a scoreless tie April 9), the Spartans broke through, getting a goal from Anne Fedrigo with 9:11 left to play to edge Canton 1-0.

"We really should have scored a couple of more goals," said Stevenson coach Jim Kimble, his team now 14-0-2. "But in any event, this was a game we definitely should have won."

That was an appraisal that would be difficult to dispute. "They played well," said Canton coach Don Smith of the Spartans' performance. "They deserved it.

"We didn't go to the ball hard enough. We went to the ball hard, they just went to the ball harder."

Stevenson, in fact, did everything harder. In weather alternating between rain and ice and snow, with a consistently hard wind to propel it, the Spartans dominated — more than they did in that early-season scoreless tie.

Canton had an excuse for Stevenson's monopolizing play throughout the goalless first half — the wind. It favored the Spartans, one good reason why the Chiefs managed to push the ball out of

Raiders reign

North ends Northville's streak as league champion

BY BRAD EMONS
STAFF WRITER

The odds seemed to be against North Farmington, which was trying to unseat defending boys tennis champion Northville in the Western Lakes Activities Association tournament held at Livonia Stevenson.

The Raiders were minus the No. 2 doubles team of Adam Ludwig and Marc Solomon — both unable to play because obligations to take an advanced placement chemistry test.

But after the three-day tournament was concluded, the replacements scored high marks as North recorded a team-high 28 points to end Northville's five-year reign.

The Mustangs finished second with 23, while Farmington was a distant third with 13. See statistical summary.

"Northville has been a great champion and we've enjoyed our rivarly with them," North coach Dennis King said. "For the past few years they've won their division (Western) and we've won ours (Lakes). And last year we lost to them by one point (25-24)."

North and Northville won two singles titles apiece, and it was 2-2 between the two schools in doubles.

King was forced to alter his doubles lineup because of the absence of Ludwig and Solomon.

Seniors Steve Lehrman and Peter Golaszewski defended their title in the No. 1 flight with a 3-6, 6-0, 6-3 victory in the finals over Livonia Churchill's senior tandem of Chip Norton and Nader Salah.

WLAA TENNIS

Lehrman and Golaszewski entered Friday's Class A regional at Northville with a 13-3 record.

Meanwhile, for Norton and Salah, it was only their second loss of the year.

King was forced to move his No. 3 team of freshman Chris Erickson and Mark Frankel up to No. 2 and the North pair reached the finals before losing to Northville in three sets. It was the first loss of the year in 15 matches for the Raider pair.

North's No. 3 team of sophomore Brandon Finkel and Brady Dwyer, which had played only three matches together coming into the tournament, were unseeded because they moved up a flight.

But they also reached the final before losing to the Mustangs in straight sets.

Thrust into the North varsity lineup for the first time were a pair of freshmen, Jon Panush and Greg Fox.

The two proceeded to take the No. 4 flight with a 6-1, 6-3 win over Farmington's duo of Jeff Daley and Chris Lee. Northville's top-seeded team of Derek Sokolosky and Paul Stachura were upset in the quarterfinals by Daley and Lee, 2-6, 6-4, 6-4.

"When they (Northville) lost at fourth doubles that really hurt them," King said. "Our two freshmen really didn't play nervous. They hit the ball and they played very aggressive.

"We had two others we could have brought up who could have done a good job. Our strength is our depth and we arose to the occasion beautifully."

Sophomore Brad Jaffe, who raised his record to 14-2, led the North singles parade with a 4-6, 6-1, 6-3 win over Farmington Hills Harrison's Ryan Shade in the finals at No. 1.

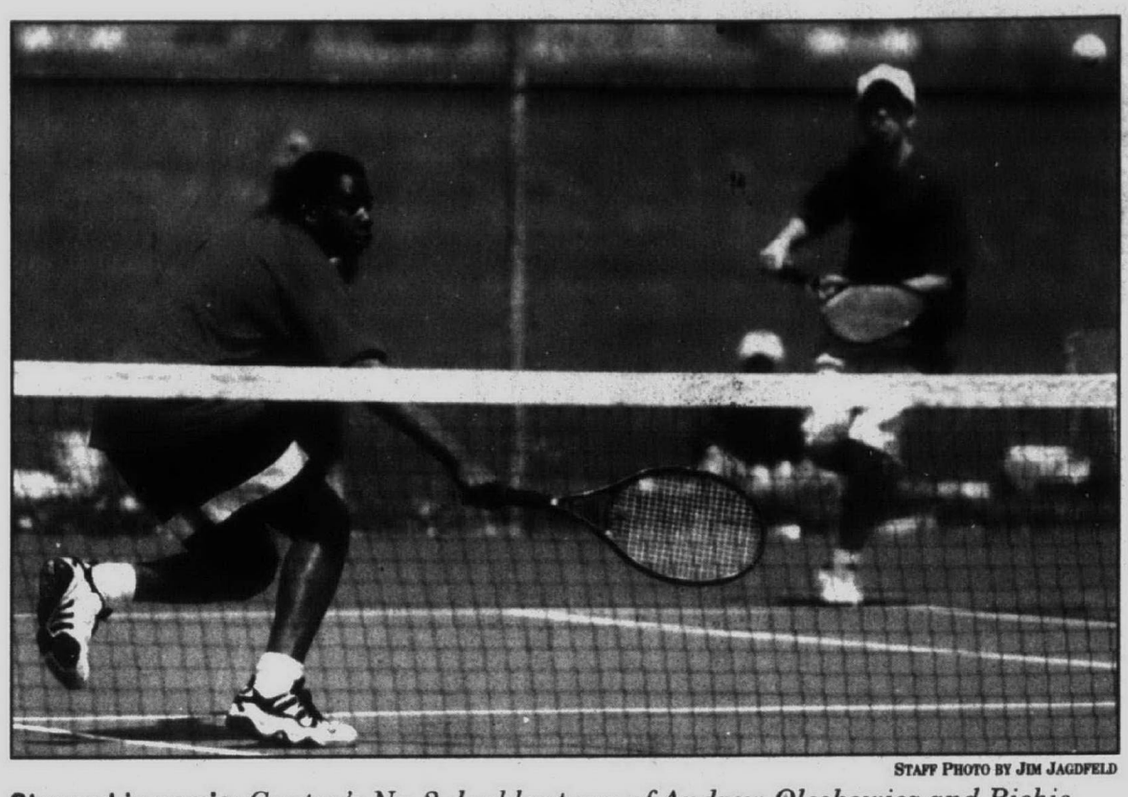

Senior Seth Weingarten, who played the previous two years as North's No. 1 player, captured the title at No. 2 with a 7-5, 6-1 win against Northville's Mike Bush.

Weingarten was 16-0 entering the regional.

"It's nice to have two great players," King said. "If Brad hadn't come in and played No. 1 this year, then Seth would have been right in there contending himself."

Northville's Arjun Srinivasan handed North junior Steve Krieger his first defeat in 15 matches at No. 3 in straight sets.

The Mustangs also emerged victorious at No. 4 singles as top seed Ganesh Nayakwadi defeated North sophomore Justin Street for the title, 6-3, 6-1. It was only Street's second loss of the year in 16 matches.

Crusaders stay alive in NAIA regional tournament

MADONNA

The weather took its toll on the NAIA Great Lakes Regional Baseball Tournament bracket, which started Wednesday in Battle Creek and was still unfinished after Friday due to rainouts.

What the weather couldn't postpone was Madonna University's determined march through the field. The Fighting Crusaders, seeded seventh, jolted second seed Ohio Dominican, a team that had beaten them five-straight times this season, 9-8 in Wednesday's opening round.

On Thursday, top-seeded Marian College (Ind.) bounced Madonna 14-7, putting the Crusaders in the loser's bracket. They stayed alive, however, with a 7-6 triumph over Bethel College (Ind.) Friday.

The win over Bethel improved Madonna's record to 25-29-1; Bethel finished its season with a 41-12 mark, and Dominican ended at 46-13. Marian was 29-24 after beating Madonna.

After tossing seven scoreless innings, the Crusaders' Eric Butler weakened in the eighth against Bethel Friday. Butler surrerendered six runs on 12 hits and a walk before giving way to Jason Carter, who earned his fifth save of the season by retiring all three batters he faced in the ninth.

Madonna scored four times in the second, Kevin Foley's two-run single the big hit of the inning. The Crusaders added two more runs in the third on a sacrifice fly by Daryl Rocho and a single by Pete Quinn (from Redford Thurston).

What proved to be the game-winner scored on Dan Taylor's RBI single in the fourth, which made it 7-0.

The opening-round win over Dominican took a good deal of resolve by the Crusaders. They built a 7-2 lead through six innings, the big blows a three-run home run by Delano Voletti in a four-run fourth and a two-run homer by Aaron Shrewsbury in the fifth.

Dominican battled back, scoring three in the seventh and three more in the eighth off Crusader starter Dan Pydyn (from Plymouth).

Dominican's three-run rally in the eighth, countered by a single Madonna run scored in the bottom of the seventh, left the game tied at 8-all as the Crusaders came to the plate in the eighth.

The game-winning rally started with two out. Mike LaPointe and Kevin Foley singled, putting runners at first and second for Eric Marcotte (Plymouth Canton). Marcotte came through with a base hit, driving in LaPointe with the game-winner.

Mitch Jabczenski was the winning pitcher in relief; he worked one scoreless inning.

Voletti finished with two hits and three runs batted in for Madonna. Shrewsbury had two hits and two RBI, Marcotte had two hits and Rocho had a hit and two RBI.

Against Marian, Shrewsbury kept his perfect play at the plate intact, going 4-for-4 with two home runs, making him 6-for-6 in the first two games with three homers, a double and four RBI.

Unfortunately, it wasn't enough. Craig Benedict (from Plymouth Canton) was tagged for nine runs on 13 hits and two walks in seven innings as Marian prevailed, 14-7. Taylor also had two hits and an RBI for Madonna.

Chiefs clinch top spot in WLAA tourney

When it counted most, Plymouth Canton's softball team came through like champions.

And that's just what Thursday's 11-7 come-from-behind win over Northville earned the Chiefs — the Western Lakes Activities Association's Western Division co-championship.

The victory gave Canton a 9-1 record in the division, same as Livonia Franklin. Since Canton and Franklin split their two-game series with each other, they will be co-champs in the division.

But it will be the Chiefs who will play for the WLAA title next Wednesday at Farmington, by virtue of a better overall WLAA record. They are 27-4 overall, 14-2 in the WLAA; Franklin is 20-6 overall, 13-3 in the WLAA.

SOFTBALL

Canton led Northville 1-0, but the Mustangs struck for six runs in the third before the Chiefs "started to hit the ball again," said coach Jim Arnold.

Canton scored twice in the fourth and took the lead with a four-run sixth. Tara Biro had two hits and three runs batted in to lead the attack, but she had plenty of company: Angela Litwin got three hits and two RBI, Jenny Sikora had three hits, Amy LaGrow had two hits and two RBI and Amber LaGrow got two hits and an RBI.

Gretchen Hudson improved her record to 14-2 with the pitching win, in relief of Sarah Carson, who started and lasted three innings. Hudson gave up three runs on three hits and two walks, striking out three.

"It was pretty exciting," said Arnold. "We were a little flat. Northville was hitting the ball, but once we got their timing down we started hitting the ball.

"The kids played well despite the weather. I'm extremely proud of them."

The division title is the Chiefs' third, their first since 1993. Canton will be trying to avenge an earlier 4-2 loss when it battles Farmington for the WLAa championship Wednesday.

Salem 10, Harrison 8: Well, at least Plymouth Salem got this game in.

The Rocks have played just seven of their 10 WLAA Lakes Division games, with the regular season-ending crossover to be played Wednesday. The win over the crippled Hawks, whose one healthy pitcher — Ali Ault — suffered a neck injury in the game, raised their record to 12-16 overall.

Ault's neck problem sent her to the sidelines in the fourth inning. Leslie Schrock, who had a sore back, repaced her and worked the final three innings. Combined, they walked 12 batters, gave up five hits and hit a batter.

Stefanie Volpe led Salem with two hits.

Canton 8, Salem 2: Wildness ruined any hopes Salem might have entertained regarding an upset of Plymouth Canton in a game played Tuesday at Massey Field.

Gretchen Hudson relieved Sarah Carson in the sixth inning and was the winning pitcher, tossing two scoreless innings. Salem got two runs on six hits off of Carson.

Shannon Coultas took the loss for Salem. She allowed eight runs on seven hits, seven walks and four hit batsmen. She struck out two.

The Rocks led 2-0 going into the fifth, when Canton scored twice on a two-out, bases-loaded single by Kristin Witt.

The Chiefs took the lead for good in the sixth, loading the bases on two walks and a hit batter. Jenny Sikora's single drove in the go-ahead — and game-winning — run.

Salem scored in the second on a bases-loaded walk to Karen Prosyk and in the third on Carah Best's RBI double.

Northville stops Canton streak; Salem continues to falter

After five-straight losses, Plymouth Canton's baseball team turned around. At least for a while.

The Chiefs won their second-straight baseball game Wednesday when they defeated North Farmington 6-5 with a two-run comeback in the eighth inning.

Unfortunately, the streak was short-lived. Northville ended it with a 6-2 victory Thursday.

Canton fell to 8-13 overall with the Northville result and finished 3-7 in the Western Lakes Activities Association's Western Division.

In the loss to Northville, Canton coach Scott Dickey called Jason Mortiere's pitching performance a good one in a losing cause. Mortiere allowed two earned runs on nine hits and three walks in six innings, striking out four.

"He threw a lot better today," said Dickey. "Even though he gave up a lot, he threw better."

The Chiefs got run-scoring singles from Neil Wildfong and Nate Copenhaver; they had just three hits in the game.

In Wednesday's win over North, it was a never-say-die effort that won it for the Chiefs. The Raiders led 4-0 going into the bottom of the sixth, but Canton struck for four runs to tie it.

BASEBALL

Wildfong and Copenhaver walked to start the rally; Pat Noonan provided the key hit, a three-run home run.

Jeff Opalinski followed Noonan's dinger with a single. Dave Kwiatkowski and Andrew Copenhaver bunted Opalinski along, and Jason Tallant drove him home with the game-tying run.

After a scoreless seventh, North got an unearned run in the top of the eighth to go ahead 5-4.

Canton struck back, with Andrew Copenhaver walking to start the inning. Joe Cortellini's sacrifice bunt moved Copenhaver to second, and Tallant was intentionally walked.

Wildfong singled to score the tying run, with the runners moving up a base on the throw home. Nate Copenhaver then delivered the game-winning run with a single.

Noonan led the Chiefs with two hits and three RBI; Wildfong and Nate Copenhaver each had two hits and an RBI.

Ben Tucker, a sophomore, pitched extremely well in taking the win for Canton. He worked all eight innings, giving up three earned runs on eight hits with no walks and 11 strikeouts. Tucker is 3-2.

Harrison 8, Salem 3: At Farmington Harrison Wednesday, Plymouth Salem kept it close until the sixth, then gave up four runs in absorbing the defeat.

Combined with Thursday's 8-1 loss to visiting Walled Lake Central, the Rocks fell to 9-14 overall. They finished 1-9 in the WLAA's Lakes Division. Central finished 6-4 in the Lakes and is 13-13 overall; Harrison is 13-3 overall.

Against Harrison, Matt Derocher was the winning pitcher, stopping Salem on six hits with no walks, striking out three.

C.J. Ghannam riddled the Rocks for three hits, two of them doubles, driving in three runs and scoring three others, with four stolen bases. Mike Fisher also had two hits for Harrison.

Against Central, the Rocks managed just four hits off winner Shawn Morrison, who walked two and struck out 10. A five-run second inning by the Vikings doomed Salem.

PCA 5, Franklin Road 1: Plymouth Christian Academy scored three times in the first inning and twice more in the fourth, then rode the arms of pitchers James Jones and Jim Speier to its 16th-straight win Thursday at Southfield Franklin Road Christian.

The win gave PCA the Michigan Independent Athletic Conference Red Division championship, the Eagles first title since 1987.

Doug Robillard opened the game for the Eagles with a single, later scoring on a single by Jon Isensee, and closed the game by snaring a line drive at third base, then tagging the bag to double up the base runner and end the game.

Pat Frye had an RBI with a sacrifice fly and Randy Dahlman drove in a run with a double for PCA.

Jones worked the first five innings, giving up one run on three hits and two walks, striking out eight. Speier tossed two scoreless innings of relief, allowing one hit and three walks, with two strikeouts.

PCA improved to 18-3 overall and finished 6-0 in the division.

In '96, Collins missed qualifying for the state tournament but came back the week after the regionals to win medalist honors at the WLAA Tournament. The WLAA Tournament will be Thursday at Hudson Mills in Dexter.

For Murinas, this will be her second trip to the state tournament.

Saline was the regional champion; led by overall medalist Momoko Sone, who carded an 82, Saline scored a 342 to win easily over runner-up Ann Arbor Pioneer (380).

Ann Arbor Huron was third (382), followed by Brighton (389), Salem, Walled Lake Western (401), Pinckney (421), Livonia Ladywood (422), South Lyon (432), Novi (433), Walled Lake Central (438), Livonia Churchill (442), Northville (461), Howell (467), Plymouth Canton (468), Milford (483), Ypsilanti (746) and Southfield (752).

Canton's scorers were Alyson Young (103), Sandra Pavlo (113), Jess Dumas (125) and Julie Dziekan (127).

Salem's 3,200-meter relay team of Katie Bonner, Ellen Stemmer, Nicole Bolton and Kristie Giddings also finished first.

Hurdler Lisa Maul won the 300 intermediates and added a second in the 100 highs.

The other first was garnered by Bolton in the 3,200 run (11:30.9).

Another state individual qualifier was second-place finisher Bonner in the 400 and 800. She also teamed up with Maul, Giddings and Ruth Viforeanu for a second in the 1,600 relay. Meanwhile, Ellen Stemmer gained a provisional qualifying time with a third in the 1,600.

"We've got a couple of more weeks of training and big meets," Gregor said. "And we're still capble of putting forth a better effort than today."

Stevenson junior Kelly Travis won the 1,600 (5:21.3) and took second in the 3,200. Teammate Kelly McNeilance was second in 1,600 and made a provisional qualifying time in the 800.

The two also teamed up with Danielle Harris and Andrea Parker for a second in the 3,200 relay.

Plymouth Canton, fifth overall, was led by long jump champ Nkechi Okwumabua (17-7). She also teamed up with Alina Boyden, Tiffany Williams and Doris Igwe for a second in the 400 relay.

Salem's 3,200-meter relay team of Andy Briggs, Matt Fair, Kevin Conte and Ian Searcy four-peated as regional champs.

Searcy, the lanky junior, won the 800 in 1:58.2, and pulled along Briggs to qualify as third-place provisional finisher (1:59.2).

The Rocks' Nick Allen also qualified with a second in the 3,200 as Livonia Stevenson's Rob Block comfortably won the race in 9:50.6.

One of the meet's stars was Churchill sophomore Ryan Kearney, who swept the 110- and 300-meter hurdles in 14.8 and 40.7, respectively.

Terek was also third in the long jump and fourth in the 200. Redford Catholic Central, seventh in the team standings, will be sending Dan Dominguez and Brian Douglas in the shot put; its 3,200 relay team of Chris Laney, John Griffin, Wayne Brigee and John Faunce; and double qualifier Brian Teefey in the 200 and 400.

their own side of the field and into Stevenson's less than a half-dozen times over the first 40 minutes.

But with zeroes on the scoreboard for both teams at the half, there was reason for Canton to be optimistic. "At the end (of the first half), we were just trying to get out of it (tied)," said Smith.

The Chiefs did, and that disturbed Kimble. "I was concerned at halftime because of the wind," he admitted. "I wasn't sure how we'd react."

The Spartans could not have reacted better, by any standard. Despite the dreadful weather, they crowded the sidelines cheering their teammates on, while the Chiefs huddled on their bench.

And Stevenson continued to apply pressure, which finally took its toll on Canton. "Under pressure, sometimes you don't execute too well," noted Smith.

With less than 10 minutes left, the Chiefs' execution did indeed break down. Three times they had a chance to clear the ball out of their own end, and out of harm's way; three times they failed.

The loose ball finally found its way to Fedrigo, in a crowd 10 yards in front of the Chiefs' net. Her shot rattled off the cross bar before deflecting in for the game's only score.

The loss was the first for Canton (11-1-2), the defending Class A state champions, since last May when they lost to Stevenson 1-0.

The realization of the Chiefs' sovereignty helped inspire the Spartans. "They're still the reigning state champs," said Kimble. "That's the way we approached this game."

If they can retain their determination throughout the state tournament, which gets underway this week, the Spartans could be the team that replaces Canton.

Learning our state symbols is common among many elementary school students.

In the process of learning to identify what the symbols are, they are also learning some characteristics of the symbol.

This is a great springboard for teachers to use as they teach math, reading, science, art, and writing.

Becoming aware of our state symbols allows us to realize the diversity of features in our state. Hopefully, this awareness will lead to concern and respect for those features and other features.

For many years a white-tailed deer has been on the official Michigan highway maps. It is next to the official state symbols such as the brook trout, Petosky stone, greenstone, white pine, robin and apple blossom.

It has never been an official state mammal. But it may soon become our official mammal. Our legislature may soon vote on this issue along with another new state symbol.

At the last annual meeting of the Michigan Wildflower Association in March, it was announced that the large-flowered trillium received the most votes for state wildflower. This would be in addition to the state flower — the apple blossom. The Michigan Botonical Club is suggesting the dwarf lake iris. Both are excellent choices, but the trillium is much more common than the iris.

It reminds me of the debate about the state bird.

Robins are very common and can be seen by more people than the rare, but unique Michigan bird, the Kirtland's warbler.

Acknowledging a common bird means everybody can see it and gain an affinity for it. On the other hand, a rare species alerts people to those species that are uncommon and should be preserved.

If you have an opinion, you can write your legislators and let them know how you feel.

Recognizing new state symbols helps to draw attention to the diverse world we live in.

Soon a state insect will be proposed, and one already being suggested is the green darner dragonfly. Another great choice.

If voted on, it will be added to the above symbols along with the official state reptile — the painted turtle, and the official soil — the Kalkaska sands.

All of the official symbols should be added to our map and other widely distributed documents.

TEN PIN ALLEY

AL HARRISON

The time has come to say goodbye to the regular season, and there were some incredible milestones reached in this local bowling scene. There were many record high scores for series, triplicates and plenty of 300 games registered here and there. The men and women of our communities who happen to enjoy this game had plenty to cheer for in the '96-97 season. We had plenty of tournament winners, a lot of money was raised for various charities via bowl-a-thons and various other fund-raisers. In all, there was plenty of fun to go around for everyone, young and old, large or small, high or low averages, etc. Some folks are thinking that high scores have become too prevalent, that it should be more difficult to shoot an honor score (just like back in the good old days). Some blame the ball manufacturers for producing "hook in a box" or balls that can destroy the pins, not enough to just knock 'em over? Bowling balls have even reached the $300 price plateau (who would have thought that just 10 years age?). Bowling itself has gotten better in recent years with the onset of automatic scoring systems, better lane materials and maintenance methods, more knowledgeable bowlers, and of course, better equipment. "Yes, honey, I really do need another ball."

Speaking of records, Jeremy Sonnenfeld has decided to spend his summer away from college by sharing with others the experience of bowling a sanctioned "900" series, the first person ever to do this. He is scheduling a speaking tour while on hiatus for the summer from the University of Nebraska. Jeremy can bowl, sign autographs and answer attendee questions about his bowling career and the feat of bowling a perfect series. If your league or organization is interested, call the "Bowl 900 Hot Line" toll free at 1-888-553-1412 or e-mail for info only: BOWL900@aol.com, state your name, title, event, location and anticipated date as well as a daytime and evening numer where you can be reached.

The Greater Detroit Bowling Association (GDBA) has announced that State Representative David Jaye will receive the association's "Bowlers' Achievement Award for 1996-97. It was formerly known as the "Bowler's Man of the Year Award." Jaye, who sponsored HB 6114, the bill which allows bowling leagues to legally run mystery games and such is currently the State Representative for the 32nd District in Macomb County. Scott Bennett, Eric Bogedin and DonWilliams will each share in the "Meritorious Service Award for their sucessful efforts to guide the Jaye Bill through the many long and arduous steps that it took to defeat the Michigan Liquor Control Commission. It was nothing short of a miracle to pull it off the way they did including the 200,000 plus signatures from concerned citizens who also happened to be bowlers just like you and me, those petitions were completed in about one week. Bennett is the Executive Director of Bowling Centers of Michigan, based in Lathrup Village, Begedin is the owner of Classic Lanes in Rochester Hills and Williams owns Plum Hollow Lanes in Southfield. Together with Rep. Jaye, they did a great job, and were one of the top stories of the year. The $300 ball? Yes, it is out in some pro shops now, it is the "Quantum HELIX" byBrusnwick and even comes in right and left handed models.

BY RENEE M. SKOGLUND • SPECIAL WRITER

Like Benjamin Franklin, Jon Trennepohl of Canton, flies kites. However, he doesn't test out theories of electricity even though he once worked as an electrician. Trennepohl, the owner of Kites & Fun Things near downtown Plymouth, flies for fun and sport.

"When you're flying kites, you're not thinking about anything else. And you don't have to pay to play, like in golf," he said.

Trennepohl and his wife Marieanne sell all kinds of colorful single- and double-line kites and unique wind socks at their store on Main Street. The kites come in all shapes and sizes. You'll find Marilyn Monroe, eagles, buzzards and fish just waiting for some string and a chance to soar.

The Trennepohls specialize in high-end, carbon-framed competitive sports kites. They manufacture their own brand under the trade name Sky Burner Kites. The dual-string kites with their eight-foot wing spans are made of paper-thin rip-stop nylon or polyester and can cost up to $350.

"We sell them all over the world. A lot in Japan. They're one of our biggest customers. The Japanese are into real quality products made in America," said Trennepohl.

The Trennepohls don't try to compete with Meijer or Toys-R-Us when it comes to single-line beginners kites, which cost between $6 and $10. "But all of our stuff is of better quality," said Jon Trennepohl. In addition to kites and wind socks, the store carries boomerangs and other non-battery wind toys.

Trennepohl started getting "high" on kites about 10 years ago after a friend showed him a kite and gave him a kiting magazine. While on vacation in Salt Lake City a short time later, he walked into a kite store. A month after returning home, he quit his electrician job and opened his own business. He was manufacturing Kite Burners a year later.

Teachers often call Trennepohl to teach kiting to their students. Trennepohl loves to oblige and throws in a history lesson as well. He tells the kids that kites came from China 2,000 years ago, where they were used in war as signals to calculate the distance away of a besieged city. Pacific Islanders often attached fishing lines to kites made of leaves. And Orville and Wilbur Wright flew kites to develop aviation theories.

"Kiting is family fun. It's better than having the kids watch television," he said.

Every Wednesday evening between 5 and 7 p.m. during the spring and summer, Trennepohl and other kite fliers can be found in the south parking lot of Schoolcraft College in Livonia doing what they love best: flying their double-line kites and playing with the wind.

"Dual-lines are more exciting to fly, more movement," he said.

Marieanne Trennepohl, who spends most of her time handling the retail part of the business, said women make very good sport kite competitors. "Women seem to have a better touch, an easier touch. Men seem to want to muscle the kites around too much," she said.

Kite flying is no longer just an outdoor activity. Jon Trennepohl has flown his kite on a 15-foot line in the Summit's gym in Canton. "Kites are so light, just the slightest aerobic movements keeps them flying," said Trennepohl.

Trennepohl said both indoor and outdoor kite competitions are judged according to choreography and execution. Indoor competition is also judged by entertainment value.

Kites & Fun Things is participating in the Michigan Sport Kite Classic on Aug. 9 and 10 at Schoolcraft College. The event is sponsored by the Four Seasons Kite Club.

Marieanne says there's one drawback to being married to a kite flier: "I guess women whose husbands are kite fliers can't say 'go fly a kite.'"

(If you're interested in joining Jon Trennepohl's group of kite fliers on Wednesday evenings, contact him at (313) 454-3760. The Four Seasons Kite Club meets on the first and third Sunday at Schoolcraft College. For more information, call club president Joe Wright at 810-960-0631.)

ON THE RUN

MARYBETH DILLON

The Downtown Runners and walkers are coming to Plymouth, and are welcoming local residents to join them for a workout.

On Tuesday nights, club members make the rounds, running or walking from a different Detroit or Windsor restaurant/bar. Many do loops through downtown's hilly, wooded Elmwood Cemetery.

At 6:15 p.m. Tuesday, May 27, the club will meet at the Lower Town Grill in Old Village at the corner of Liberty and Starkweather.

The non-competitive event will feature a choice of routes. One will be a 3-5-mile loop through Edward Hines Park. You can also opt for 7 1/2 miles through the park and into the rolling dirt trails of Cass Benton Park.

Afterward, there'll be "food, drink and camaraderie," says event organizer John Cruz.

Downtown Runner Dan Flora and his band 'Snake Oil' will entertain. The group plays blues, rock and R&B."

For more information, call Cruz at (313)453-0755.

•Hats off to Paul Aufdemberge of Novi, whose high-mileage training for Grandma's Marathon is paying off.

Aufdemberge had a great race in the Old Kent River Bank Run in Grand Rapids (May 10), where he was honored as Michigan Runner Magazine's Runner of the Year. It couldn't have happened to a nicer human being.

Aufdemberge, 32, ran an impressive 1:17:03, good for fourth overall (and $1,000) behind winner John Kagwe (1:15:21) and Joseph Kariuki (1:15:47), both of Kenya; and third-place John Sense of Cincinnati (1:15:58).

Aufdemberge defeated South Africa's Mark Plaatjes, (1:18:57) now a U.S. citizen and winner of the world marathon championship in 1995, as well as Jerry Lawson, (1:19:24), the new superstar of American running whose 2:10 marathon ranked him atop all marathoners in the U.S. in 1996.

Also honored at Old Kent was Laura Murphy of Rochester, Michigan Runner's female Runner of the Year.

Doug Kurtis of Northville and Laurel Cihak of North Muskegon were recognized as the state's outstanding master runners.

Jim Forshee, 70, of Ann Arbor, was named Michigan's top senior runner.

•Scott McDonough of Livonia was also in the money at Old Kent. Age seems to have little effect on McDonough, now 52. He took third in the open quad wheelchair division in 1:29:36, and won $600.

Gerou finished first among the Michigan contingent in California's Big Sur Marathon (April 27) with a time of 3:07:46 in windy conditions.

The hilly course traverses some of the most scenic country imaginable. Runners are so busy soaking up the sights along the rugged Pacific coastline - including the often-filmed Bixby Bridge and the ranch of Candid Camera's Allen Funt — that the miles tick by. The marathon features live classical music every five miles and ends in the picturesque town of Carmel.

Gerou, whose marathon personal-best is 2:41, finished 37th overall and seventh in his age group.

•Domino's Pizza Ann Arbor Triathlon: The event will debut at 8 a.m. on Father's Day, Sunday, June 15 with five-wave starts at Halfmoon Lake Beach in the Pinckney Recreation Area.

The event consists of a half-mile swim; 14-mile bike; and 4.5-mile trail run.

Participants may register as individuals, clydesdales, 195 pounds and up for males; and 150 pounds-plus for females; or as relay teams.

Teams may be all-male, all-female or mixed.

Awards will be given in 12 different age groups. For more information, contact Athletic Ventures, L.C. at (313) 662-1000.

Send items for "On the Run" to M.B. Dillon at the Observer, 794 S. Main, Plymouth 48170, or fax them to (313) 459-4224.

MEDICAL BRIEFS

Emergency treatment

Botsford General Hospital in Farmington Hills has been awarded emergency center classification by the state of Michigan, the highest category a hospital can receive.

"We're very pleased by this designation," said Dr. Ronald Lagerveld, D.O., director of Botsford's Emergency Medicine Department. "Not all hospitals' emergency services capabilities are created equally. Differences in available equipment and staffing are pivotal in terms of a hospital's services capability and how well a health facility can serve the community.

"We're very proud that Botsford has succeeded in meeting the highest standards in emergency medical care classification."

The state defines an emergency center as equipped, prepared and staffed to provide prompt emergency medical care for all emergencies, including specialized services for adults, children, infants and newborns. Additionally, the center must have a capacity adequate to accommodate the direct and referred patient loads of the area it serves.

Botsford is a full-service hospital with board-certified/residency-trained specialists on staff. It offers both Urgent Care and Emergency Care services at the east entrance of its main building, located at 28050 Grand River Ave. Urgent Care is open 10 a.m. to 11 p.m. daily. Emergency Care is available 24 hours a day.

Suburban links

Henry Ford Health System is linking its Detroit hospital and major suburban medical centers, including one in Dearborn, with nine state-of-the-art cardiac ultrasound systems.

Henry Ford is first in the state to use the equipment, which offers more accurate images compared to conventional ultrasound, all in the convenience of the patient's back yard.

"This is a new era in diagnostic medicine," said Dr. Mohsin Alam, M.D., director of echocardiography at Henry Ford Hospital. "This equipment solves the big problem in ultrasound – seeing things more clearly."

The Sequoia C256 echocardiography systems give physicians and providers the ability to store, retrieve, review and potentially transmit superior ultrasound images from patients among the five system facilities located in the New Center area, West Bloomfield, Dearborn, Taylor and Sterling Heights.

"This equipment allows a patient to stay close to home for their ultrasound because the cardiologist can potentially read the exam data instantaneously from any of the five sites," Alam said.

"It will reduce delays and travel times for patients and physicians. Plus, the ability to transmit data while the patient is having an exam is a prime example of convenient, patient-focused care," he added.

The digital compression and storage of data also will benefit Henry Ford professionals when communicating with referring physicians across the country or when collaborating with research colleagues.

The new technology is an example of the advantage of telemedicine, which brings the best medical care available to locations convenient to the patient. In addition, the Sequoia technology provides physicians and providers with unprecedented ultrasound pictures of anatomy and disease states.

By having access to these clear, sharp ultrasound images, physicians may be able to give more accurate diagnoses without performing unnecessary invasive or costly procedures, such as cardiac catheterization, magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) and computed tomography.

"This has opened new avenues for ultrasound in patient treatment and care," said Alam, a resident of Bloomfield Township. "We now have excellent image quality and we are making the technology widely accessible and available to patients."

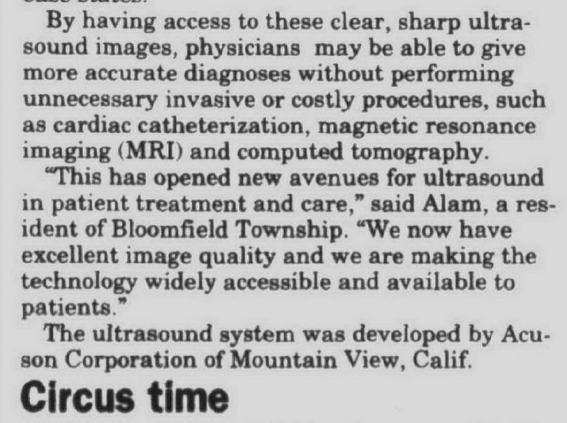

The ultrasound system was developed by Acuson Corporation of Mountain View, Calif.

Circus time

The annual Circus Weekend, sponsored by St. Joseph Mercy Hospital-Ann Arbor, will run Thursday through Sunday, June 12-15, and will feature the Royal Hanneford Circus. Proceeds will benefit women's breast cancer services.

Ticket prices feature three levels of seating: ringside box seats, $20 each for adults and children; grandstand chairs, $15 for adults and children; and general admission seats, $10 for adults and children. A $5 discount is available for children 14 and younger and adults 65 and older on advance purchase tickets. Tickets will be available on the circus grounds on Ellsworth Road beginning in June. They are also available through TicketMaster outlets.

Items for Medical Briefs are welcome from all hospitals, physicians, companies and residents active in the Observer-area medical community. Items should be typed or legibly written and sent to: Medical Briefs, c/o The Observer Newspapers, 36251 Schoolcraft Road, Livonia 48150 or faxed to (313) 591-7279.

Surgery has Canton man LIPOSUCTION thinking thin

Probing: Dr. Lawrence Castleman and his assistant use low-level aspiration and manual probing to remove the liquefied fat from this patient's mid-section.

BY MEGAN SWOYER
SPECIAL WRITER

It's Robert's big, or shall we say "little," day.

Robert, a 53-year-old Canton resident, whose real name is not published here because hewants to remain anonymous, is tired of his unattractive, bulging midsection. In less than an hour,he will undergo a new fat removal process, a liposuction procedure called ultrasonic-assistedlipoplasty (UAL).

A sales representative for a printing company in Westland, Robert confides thathe's a bit edgy but not really scared.Dressed in an operation gown with an intravenous tube hanging from his arm, the relaxedpatient,(he's been sedated with drugs to make him groggy and forgetful) poses for a nurse who photographs his midsection from several angles. Then his fleshy belly is marked with various linesand spots that will help direct the surgeon during the procedure.

Robert, who is Dr. Lawrence Castleman's first official UAL patient, wants to get the procedure over with as soon as possible,making it the fastest "goodbye" party he's ever attended. Aware of some of the procedure's downsides, including potential burns, he still opts to get on with it.

UAL uses high-frequency sound waves to melt fat into an easy-to-extract liquid. Unlike othertraditional liposuction, which vacuums out flab in small bits through a hollow needle, the UAL method is supposed to reduce trauma to the patient's body.

Compared to a traditional liposuctiontechnique, larger quantities of fat can be removed, there is reduced blood loss and there's a fasterrecovery time for the patient. "Basically, it's a pencil-size tube with a titanium tip that sucks fat," explained the 55-year-old doctor, who took delivery on the new equipment just one day before this premiere surgery.

New technique

"You pass a current through the titanium tip and rev it up to 40,000 RPMs. A wave occurs and the tip will liquefy anything it touches," he says, explaining the process in the most simplest of terms. "It's destructive," he added, "and it won't touch blood vessels or nerves (which are not liquids). Fat is aliquid and so it is melted down."

Generating: A few cosmetic surgeons in the area now are helping patients get rid of excess fat with a new, somewhat controversial ultrasonic lipoplasty procedure via this generator. It converts electrical energy into high frequency sound which liquefies fat.

"I've tried exercise and eating right. Oh, yeah, I have all that home workout equipment, butafter so many years, it (fat) starts building up," he explained. "And I don't try very hard to lose it onmy own. I don't have interest in doing that and I know I don't. The next thing to do isto have someone help you," said Robert, who eventually wants to lose 35 pounds off of his 5-foot, 8-inch, 190-pound frame.

Enter Castleman, one of the first cosmetic surgeons in southeast Michigan toperform this still controversial procedure. Castleman, who practices cosmetic and laser surgery in Troy and Southgate, has alreadyspent a lot of time with Robert, explaining the pros and cons of the cutting-edge procedure.

"The oscillation of the tip will cause cavitation. The whole thing is based on cavitation,which is a physical phenomenon that occurs with fluids. You introduce a sound wave into the fluid.It makes a bubble formation. The bubble implodes, translating energy that ruptures the membraneof a fat cell," explained Castleman.

Dr. W. Peter McCabe, a plastic surgeon at Renaissance Plastic Surgery in St. Clair Shoresand the chief of Plastic Surgery at St. John Hospital, says UAL can bring about superior results.McCabe, who performed UAL on his first two cases this spring, explains that the procedure iseasier on the patient and the surgeon.

"Traditional liposuction is like using a snow shovel. UAL ismore like a violin," he said. But, cautioned McCabe, it will never replace conventional liposuction. Heavoids thin-skin areas of the body, including inner thighs and inner knees. "There's too much probability for burns there," said McCabe, who learned the UAL technique at the Cleveland Clinic.

Castleman's nurse, Norma D'emidio, says Robert will likely see results that are more of a reshaping than a big weight loss. "Anyone who wants to do [UAL] simply for weight loss, won't see those kind of results," she said.

As D'emidio, surgical assistant Carol Solo and a nurse anesthetist prepare Robert forsurgery, they continue to chat with their patient about his expected results. "Abdomens do reallywell" as compared to other areas of the body, said D'emidio. "Soon, your fat cells in that area willbe gone," she added. "And they will never come back ... to that area."

A year ago, only a few surgeons in the country used the technique. "It was pioneered by Michele Zocchi, an Italian plastic surgeon," said Castleman. Then the American Society ofAesthetic Plastic Surgery set up a task force to study UAL and by the end of 1997 some 1,500surgeons are expected to know the procedure.

Some drawbacks

But although there's almost no bruising and no loss of sensation, according to Castleman,the procedure does have its drawbacks.

"The downside is burns. It's very technique-critical," hesaid. In other words, if a surgeon botches the technique, the ultrasound could burn a patient's skin.Solo said, "As long as a doctor respects the equipment and keeps fluids pumping in as the fat isextracted, then you won't have any burns."

Dr. Herman Houin, a plastic surgeon for the Henry Ford Health System, has been readingup on UAL and listening to various speakers. Personally, he hasn't given the treatment a thumbs-up yet, saying that there's a lot of controversy still out there. "The equipment generates an energyburst which can cause internal burns," he said. "If someone can come up with a probe that doesn'tuse so much heat, then I would consider UAL," he said. Houin plans to attend a American Society ofAesthetic Plastic Surgery meeting this month and hopes to gain more insight.

As Robert contemplates his decision just minutes before the three-hour procedure, he thinksof his wife and two children.

Smiling, he says, "She (his wife) is not real excited about it. But I said, 'I'm going to do it anyway.' I've thought about it for a long time and here I am." And he had no problem justifying the $2,500 to $3,500 price tag. (The prices are about $500 more than thetraditional liposuction and range from about $2,500 to $7,000, depending on the area of the body.) "It's for me. It's something I want to do. This may be the second best thing I've ever done (the first,he said, was his RK surgery for myopia, performed by Castleman, also an ophthalmologist). Referring to that eye surgery, Robert says he went from "thick lenses to nothing."

The question now becomes: Can he transposehis thick midsection as well?

The doctor is in

As Castleman injects the tube into Robert's belly, he checks to be sure his patient iscomfortable. "I'm fine," says an alert Robert from behind a surgery shield. "We're going to make youlook just like Twiggy," joshes Castleman, as the nurses chuckle.

Once the procedure is under way,Castleman manipulates the tube from one section of Robert's abdomen to another, constantly prodding and drawing the sucking tube in and out of his belly.

"That's pure Crisco we're taking out," saidCastleman, again joking and keeping his first-ever UAL relaxed. The doctor says he'll probablyextract at least 64 ounces of fat from Robert's midsection.

The results

It's been nine days since Robert underwent the fat-removing procedure. "I'm doing great, the soreness is almost gone," he said, in between business calls from his car phone. "I'm 99 percentback to normal."

Robert says the soreness was minor. It felt almost as if he had done one too many sit-ups. "But that's about it. They took at least 3 inches off me, which is pretty substantial," he said. "What I'm wearing right now, it's hanging really loose," he said, looking down at his baggy pants.

Teens can make world a better place to live

This is Chapter 14, "Teens and a Better Community," from Alice R. McCarthy's "Healthy Teens: Success in High School and Beyond." The book is available at Borders, Barnes & Noble and Waldenbooks.

Framework for Success

Behind the headlines about youth violence, crime, pregnancy, and other problems is an even more important and urgent story: In all towns and cities across America, the developmental infrastructure is crumbling.

Too few young people grow up experiencing key ingredients for their healthy development. They do not experience support from adults, build relationships across generations, or hear consistent messages about boundaries and values. Most have too little to do that is positive and constructive. The result is that communities and the nation are overwhelmed with problems and needs in the lives of youth.

Thus, the real challenge facing America is not to attack one problem at a time in a desperate attempt to stop the hemorrhaging. The real challenge is to rebuild the developmental infrastructure for our children and adolescents.

Though the professionals and the public sector have a role to play, much of the responsibility and capacity for the healthy development of youth is in the hands of the people. Search Institute, located in Minneapolis, Minn., has created a model for understanding the developmental needs of children and adolescents. Rooted in research on more than 250,000 American youth in grades six to 12, the framework identified 40 building blocks, or "developmental assets," that all children and adolescents need to grow up healthy, competent and caring. These assets provide a powerful paradigm for mobilizing communities, organizations, and individuals to take action for youth – action that can make a real difference.

The Power of Assets

Expert sheds light on Mayan ruins during tour

EMORY DANIELS

O&E ONLINE

In recent years, I've developed an interest in the Mayan civilization, an interest that was heightened by an opportunity to visit Mayan ruins.

Just last week I enjoyed a special on the Mayan people and civilization on PBS Channel 56.

So my eyes were drawn to an announcement of a special online guided tour and chat on Mayan ruins conducted by Dr. Merle Greene Robertson, an archaeologist and leading authority on Mayan culture, at http://www. talkcity.com.

On April 4, Robertson conducted an online tour of the Mayan ruins on the Yucatan Peninsula including the Palenque ruins. Robertson, who has spent 40 years researching and excavating the ruins, is director of the Pre-Columbian Art Research Institute and research associate at California Academy of Sciences.

Tour participants were able to ask Robertson questions and discuss the ruins with other fellow travelers from around the world via the Internet. Because the ChatZine format combines easy to use 3-D and chat technologies, the tour is a highly interactive experience and is accessible to most Internet users.

Ongoing moderated tours occur twice a week at www.talkcity.com. Check out tours on the Talk City calendar of events, which also advises visitors of upcoming, and special guest appearances such as Robertson.

Talk City has more than 900 moderated chats each week, plus member rooms, discussion boards, and more. To date, the service subjects include current events, computers, politics, art, entertainment and hobbies and games.

Oklahoma City trial

The Oklahoma City Bomb Trial site is a new venture by Digital City Denver Inc. (an American Online subsidiary) that promises to produce comprehensive information in an easy to read format plus plenty of photographs.

Daily report capsules will be given by investigative reporter Ryan Ross, who has written articles on the Oklahoma City bombing case for the Washington Post, National Law Review, Newsday, and ABA Journal. Ross also will provide weekly analysis of the jury case.

Science online

The Chicago Academy of Sciences is using online technology in the classroom with Science Power Online!, an interactive science program broadcast to classrooms and homes over the Internet. The only program of its kind is supported by a $150,000 grant from Ameritech through its long-distance learning grant program.

Science Power began three years ago as a monthly call-in cable TV program in the Chicago area. In its Internet format, Science Power is broadcast 10 a.m. every Tuesday at http://www.chias.org, the Web site of the Chicago Academy of Science.

Students and teachers from 50 classrooms, including some in Michigan, participate through E-mail, a chat board, the telephone, and video conferencing. Soon, any school or individual with Internet access will be able to view the shows worldwide.

behavior. The more assets young people experience, the more they engage in positive behaviors, such as volunteering and succeeding in school. The fewer assets kids have, the more likely they are to engage in risk-taking behaviors, violent acts and other negative behaviors. Thus, while each asset must be understood and is important, the most powerful message of developmental assets comes in seeing all 40 as a whole. These assets are cumulative – the more the better.

In short, young people who experience more of these assets are more likely to grow up caring, competent, and responsible. This important relationship between developmental assets and choices made has been documented for all types of youth, regardless of age, gender, geographical region, town size, or race/ethnicity.

The Crumbling Infrastructure

Most people recognize that influences such as caring families, discipline, educational commitments, social skills, and other assets are important for healthy development. Yet society seems to have forgotten how to make sure young people experience and develop these things. Out of 250,000 students in grades six through 12 who have been surveyed, the average young person experiences only about 16 of the 40 assets. Furthermore, 76 percent of young people experience 20 or fewer assets.

The "asset gap" exists in all types and sizes of communities. In fact, youth in 95 percent of the communities studied to date report an average of 15 to 17 assets. Thus, in virtually every town, suburb, and city in America, far too many young people are struggling to construct their lives without an adequate foundation upon which to build.

What has happened? Many of the ways society has provided these assets are no longer in place because of major societal changes: Most adults no longer consider it their responsibility to play a role in the lives of children outside their nuclear family. Also, parents are less available for their children because of demands outside the home and cultural norms that undervalue parenting. Non-family adults and institutions have become uncomfortable articulating values or enforcing appropriate boundaries for behavior.

Over the past 25 years, American society has become more and more age-segregated, providing fewer opportunities for meaningful intergenerational relationships. Socializing systems (families, schools, congregations, etc.) have become more isolated, competitive and suspicious of each other.

In place of the extended family/caring community, the mass media have become influential shapers of young people's attitudes, norms and values. As problems – and solutions – have become more complex, more of the responsibility for young people has been turned over to professionals.

The Healthy Community

For several decades, Americans have invested tremendous time, energy and resources in trying to combat symptoms of these changes. It hasn't worked. It is time for a new approach – an approach that focuses energy, creativity and resources into rebuilding the developmental foundation for all youth.

As we begin shifting our thinking we can anticipate creating communities where all young people are valued and valuable, problems are more manageable, and an attitude of vision, hope and celebration pervades community life.

Based on literature, research and work with numerous communities, Search Institute has begun developing a list of key characteristics of healthy communities for youth. The list follows.

Community Mindset:
- Children and youth are a top priority.
- All citizens have responsibility for children and youth.
- All citizens have pro-child power.
- Community understands that all children need more assets.
- Emphasis is placed on building family strengths.
- The community "wraps its arms" around teenagers.
- Community balances prevention and promotion.

Community Data:
- Community has gathered good data on pro-child resources, programs and strategies.
- Community understands levels of assets and at-risk behaviors in its own youths, and monitors changes in assets and at-risk behaviors.

Community Norms:
- The community shares and demonstrates in concrete ways basic values such as responsibility, respect, honesty, justice and equality.
- Community has clear and consistent policies on alcohol and other drugs that are consistently and actively put into practice.

Community Programming:
- After-school care is available for all children and youth.
- There is a rich variety of school-based, community and religious organizations that involve most youth in constructive activities.
- Organizations have expansive missions that include both prevention and promotion.
- Youth programs operate with a partnership mentality.
- Programs reinforce each other with appropriate redundancy.
- Peers educate and support each other.
- Mentoring is widespread (youth to youth, and adult to youth)
- Young people are involved in and empowered through community service.

Community Education:
- Parent education is available, and parents participate in it.
- Adult volunteers receive training and continuing education.
- Schools are caring and supportive for youth.

Collaboration:
- Community cooperation and collaboration occurs effectively across multiple sectors.

Located at 32231 Schoolcraft, Plymouth Technology Inc. has sustained a sales growth rate of 30 percent per year since it was founded in May 1991.

The larger laboratory will increase capacity and efficiency for analyzing and formulating treatment for boiler water, cooling water and waste water.

Three new technical representatives and an additional technical support specialist have been added to the staff.

"State-of-the-art chemical, computer and mechanical technologies are critical to water treatment for manufacturing facilities today," said Parke. "That's why there's a growing demand for expertise and services such as ours."

Executives representing 14 companies from the automotive, utilities, marketing research, advertising agency and consulting industries competed over a seven-month period in a marketing simulation game developed by Dr. A.J. Faria and Dr. John Dickinson from the University of Windsor. The competing companies, divided into two groups, ran simulated companies that produced and sold advanced notebook computer systems.

Honor Award

The engineering firm of Wade-Trim is an Honor Award winner in the American Consulting Engineers Council's 31st annual Engineering Excellence Awards competition for the firm's innovative design for two combined sewer overflow storage and treatment facilities.

Designed for the city of Inkster and Redford Township as part of Wayne County's Rouge River National Wet Weather Demonstration Program, these basins were developed to test the effectiveness of different control methods for combined sewer overflow.

"It has been our top priority since the Big Three announced it would be a requirement for suppliers starting in 1997."

Dentistry in the 90s

by Herbert M. Gardner, D.D.S. & Martha P. Zinderman, R.N., D.D.S.

TAKING STOCK OF BONDING

Bonding is the cosmetic procedure by which discolored, chipped, and stained teeth can be restored with an application of plastic resin. First, the targeted area of the tooth is etched with a mild acid solution, then the resin is brushed onto the roughened surface. The plastic is then ground to the desired shape. Another technique involves bonding a thin plastic or porcelain veneer to the front of a natural tooth. The advantage that this technique affords over traditional capping procedures is that there is no need to significantly alter the natural tooth. By contrast, a traditional crown requires that the natural tooth be ground down to a post, upon which the crown can be secured.

Cosmetic dentistry is coming of age with new materials and procedures that make a beautiful smile accessible to everyone. because our preventative and restorative programs are so successful, we have the luxury of considering cosmetic treatment for less-than-perfect smiles. Let us at LIVONIA VILLAGE DENTAL ASSOCIATES located at 19171 Merriman Road, help you make the decision that is right for your special dental needs. Please call 478-2110 to schedule an appointment. Smiles are our business.

NEW HOMES

Novi subdivision will offer 43 new homes

Salvatore LoPiccolo and Adriano Paciocco, collaborators on several residential projects, are at it again in the final phase of Royal Crown Estates in Novi.

The two will build 43 houses on a rotation basis in a platted sub off Nine Mile between Taft and Beck. They've designed some new plans and have included popular offerings from other developments.

"We're constantly improving the homes," LoPiccolo said. "You constantly learn what people want, dressed-up kitchens, baths."

"Volume ceilings are very important, four bedrooms, of course," Paciocco said

"Our fathers used to be partners years ago in the water and sewer business," Paciocco added. "We've known each other all our lives. We started doing deals together and meshed real well. We're compatible in all areas."

Six floor plans are available.

They range in price from $256,900 for a colonial of 2,400 square feet to $282,900 for a colonial of 2,725 square feet, each with four bedrooms and 2-1/2 baths.

A Cape Cod with a first-floor master suite, three additional bedrooms upstairs and 2,200 square feet of living space starts at $259,900.

This is the first new house build for most buyers in this Royal Crown phase, said Pamela S. Gale, marketing director for Multi Building, Paciocco's company. Purchasers seem to have children.

"Northville schools are a big plus," said LoPiccolo. "People in this price range, I think, still have kids in school."

The elementary school serving the sub is right next door.

"The local amenities are important too – the shopping, a lot of restaurants, parks," Paciocco added.

TAMMIE GRAVES/STAFF ARTIST

"We're very close to downtown Northville," LoPiccolo said. "It's a quiet setting."

Freeway access to I-275 and I-96 is a few miles away.

"What makes us unique in the Novi market is we're the only ones in town I know of that can offer this product at these prices," Paciocco said.

A fireplace, range and dishwasher, two-car garage, first floor laundry and a basement are standard features included at base price in all floor plans.

An energy-sealing application involving caulk and foam has virtually eliminated callbacks on windows and exterior receptacles, Paciocco said.

Exterior materials are brick and masonite wood siding.

Extras include air conditioning ($2,800), whirlpool tub ($1,100) and skylights ($800 apiece).

The model, a four-bedroom colonial of 2,700 square feet, features a foyer with two-story ceiling, living and dining rooms with volume ceilings, library, family room and kitchen/nook with built-in desk and island.

The master, with optional pan ceiling, includes a separate tub and shower, walk-in closet and two-sink vanity. Three other bedrooms, all with ceiling lights, and a second full bath also are upstairs.

Royal Crown: This model of 2,700 square feet features four bedrooms, 2-1/2 baths and all the rooms of a traditional colonial.

Base price is $275,900. The model contains many upgrades including windows, flooring, moldings and fixtures.

Prospects are impressed with several things, said Stacey Pardikes, sales rep.

"They like the dramatic front entry and open floor plan," she said. "A lot of people think it (the model) is bigger than 2,700 square feet. They think we use our space well. The school next door – they love it."

The final phase of Royal Crown is serviced by city water and sewers. The sub has sidewalks.

The property tax rate currently is $28.60 per $1,000 of state equalized valuation. That means the owners of a $265,000 house would pay about $3,800 the first year.

The annual association fee is $120.

Most lots carry a premium ranging from $1,900 to $12,900.

Bill and Leslie Clark, along with sons Nick and Steven, will live in a colonial.

"I currently live in the area," Bill said. "The sub had some nice lots that were wooded. My children don't have to change schools. We wanted Northville schools."

The first floor laundry, the possibility of a three-car garage and plenty of kitchen cabinet space were especially attractive.

"Price point was another major thing for us – good value for the money," Bill Clark said.

John and Elaine Kish also are building a colonial for themselves and son, Joel.

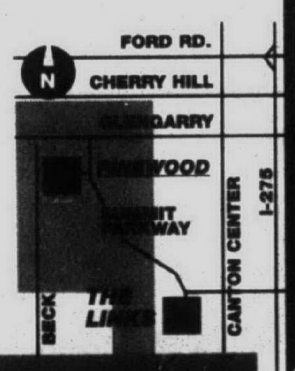

"To be involved with the Northville schools was my number one priority," John said. "Location was next. There's no traffic. It's a very nice area. The price was right.

"All the bedrooms are on the top level," he added. "Halls are very spacious. In other subs it appears like you're running through a maze. I like the way the bedrooms sit in each corner of the top level."

The model at Royal Crown Estates, (810) 305-8400, is open 1-6 p.m. weekdays, noon to 6 p.m. Saturdays and Sundays.

Plant growers have to make money in a hurry

BY A. J. DICKERSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

DETROIT (AP) – Those millions of tender plants bought from garden and home-improvement stores this time of year get their start in such places as Harold Schwall's greenhouse near Rockwood, Mich. Growing the plants from seed is big business – but for only a few weeks each year.

Schwall is a grower for Michigan's biggest greenhouse operation and he loves plants. But his own garden will not be in the ground until this summer.

Right now, he is too busy at Post Gardens Inc., making sure other people get their gardens growing. Spring is make-or-break time for Michigan's floriculture industry, the nation's fourth largest.

"Right now, we're on 10 hours a day, eight hours on Saturdays and Sundays. And if need be we'll put in overtime," Schwall said. "This is our peak time; you've got to make it when you can."

The culture and sale of flowers, bedding plants and foliage in the United States brought producers more than $3.27 billion in 1995, the Agriculture Department says.

The top producer is California, followed by Florida, Texas and then Michigan.

"But those folks (in the Sun Belt) have the luxury of being a year-round operation, where we have to be seasonal," said horticulture Professor William Carlson at Michigan State University.

Michigan, with 307 greenhouse operations, produced $170 million in wholesale floriculture sales in 1995, he said. The state's operations are centered in the Detroit area, Grand Rapids and Kalamazoo.

"Our biggest items in bedding plants are impatiens, geraniums, petunias, and then there are things like marigolds, salvia and about 10 others," said Carlson, who is also a floriculture specialist for the university's agricultural extension service.

"Most folks in this business will make 80 percent of their money in eight weeks. That's why you've got to pray for sunny weekends, no rain," Carlson said.

Michigan growers got into floriculture after World War II, when California began cornering the market on vegetables.

"You had people who were vegetable growers who wound up growing plants and for home gardens. Today, we have a bunch of folks who have plant factories. It's a very sophisticated business," Carlson said.

Post Gardens, which also has operations in Battle Creek, will grow millions of plants in its 35 acres of greenhouses and sell them to retailers such as Kmart Corp.

"People love plants, love to get out in the yard and plant," grower Schwall said. "People love to get out with nature. It's a good feeling."

Medicine cabinets – a prescription for beauty

(NAPS) – A nice reflection on bathrooms is how far medicine cabinets have come in the way of innovative lighting features and designs.

From a simple mirrored box for a handful of essentials they've evolved into beautifully crafted, halogen lit cabinets for use in the bathroom or dressing area. Halogen bulbs are often preferred for their higher efficiency, longer life and excellent color.

One elegantly crafted unit from Robern, a manufacturer of fine mirrored cabinetry and lighting fixtures, features a 3-light halogen system set into a two-door inset center cabinet. The halogen lights focus downward, gracefully illuminating the cabinet for task lighting.

The cabinet doors are mirrored both inside and out for convenient viewing and feature high polish adjustable glass shelving. A swing-out magnifying make-up mirror is included with every cabinet.

Many of the best cabinets feature practical options like Robern's mirror defogger, interior electric outlets, and extra deep cabinets for storage of oversized items and appliances.

Four inches is the standard depth of a cabinet, but a 6 or 8 inch deep unit offers up to 100 percent more capacity and the ability to store small towels and toilet tissue in the cabinet.

An informative and colorful booklet on bathroom cabinetry and lighting fixtures is available free by writing to: Robern, Dept. NAPS, 7 Wood Avenue, Bristol, PA 19007.

Garden tools need care

BY READER'S DIGEST BOOKS
FOR AP SPECIAL FEATURES

Good quality garden tools will last a lifetime if you keep them clean, sharp and free of rust.

Here are some tool-saving tips:

• Tools will last far longer if you clean and oil them after each use. This is important for digging tools, which lose their protective coatings with each use. To scrape off the dirt, keep an old putty knife on a nail near where you store your tools.

To oil your tools, keep a large container of sand mixed with used motor oil on hand (1 pint of oil to 20 pounds of sand). Clean the tool, then plunge it into the sand mixture several times.

• Protect the moving parts of gardening machinery – such as mower blades – and keep your tools rust- and corrosion-free with moisture-displacing spray lubricants such as WD-40.

• Rust on your tools? Rub them with a soap-filled steel-wool pad dipped in kerosene or turpentine, then give them a brisk rub with wadded aluminum foil.

To scour away heavy rust, use a wire-brush attachment on your electric drill.

• A coarse aluminum oxide disc (No. 36) – a common drill attachment sold at hardware stores – will put an edge back on a nicked ax or mower blade faster than a file and whetstone. Do it quickly, so that the high-speed sanding doesn't ruin the temper.

• Be sure to sharpen your hoe on the correct side – the inside edge – so that you can pull it through the ground with ease.

Here are some hints on using garden tools:

• File a sharpened V-notch into the side of your hoe. With it, you can snip weeds off at their base, even in the most hard-to-reach corners.

• If raking leaves blisters your hands, pad the rake handle with foam pipe insulation. Use the split type designed for a three-fourth-inch copper pipe. Coat the rake's handle with contact cement, cut the insulation to length and slip it on.

• Make clean, easy cuts with scissor-type pruners in which the blades slip past each other with a scissorlike action. Blade-and-anvil pruners are less expensive, but they're harder to use and crush as they cut, leaving a ragged wound that's an invitation to disease.

• A long-handled lopper is great for pruning high branches, except that you really need three hands to manage this tool properly. Create an extra hand by putting on a carpenter's apron and resting the bottom of the lopper pole in one of the pockets. This leaves one hand free to maneuver the pole and one to pull the cutting line.

• Clearing twigs, stones and other debris from a lawn is easier if you use a steel rake with fixed tines. To prevent the sharp teeth from digging into the lawn, drive wood thread spools over the rake's two outside teeth. Then the rake rides smoothly as it cleans up the lawn.

• Small garden tools are easy to lose in the yard, but not if you paint part of the handle any bright color other than green. As a bonus, you'll be more likely to get it back if someone borrows one of these personalized tools.

• Give an old unused golf bag new life as a garden tool carrier. Store long-handled tools in the slots for woods and irons, and stash your work gloves and small tools in the zippered pockets.

• To increase the amount of pressure you can put on a digging tool, such as a fork or shovel, have a short length of angle iron welded on the shoulder of the tool. It will also be kinder to your foot.

Gables give a friendly look

Tall, slender windows, custom brick work, entry sidelights, and three front gables give an open, friendly look to the Edgemont. This mid-size plan blends the formal with the informal, and provides ample spaces for both togetherness and privacy.

Family room, nook and kitchen flow together, with a two-sided fireplace at the juncture of the three spaces. Flames and warmth can be viewed, and felt, from all three rooms. A vaulted ceiling expands the sense of spaciousness in the family room. Sliding glass doors there, and in the nook, open onto a large patio.

Light washes in through these windows, along with a side window in the nook, and another one over the sink. The kitchen has a small pantry, a built-in range and a dishwasher.

The dining room, with its graceful bay window facing the street, is also richly illuminated by natural light. A pocket door slides shut to hide kitchen noise and clutter.

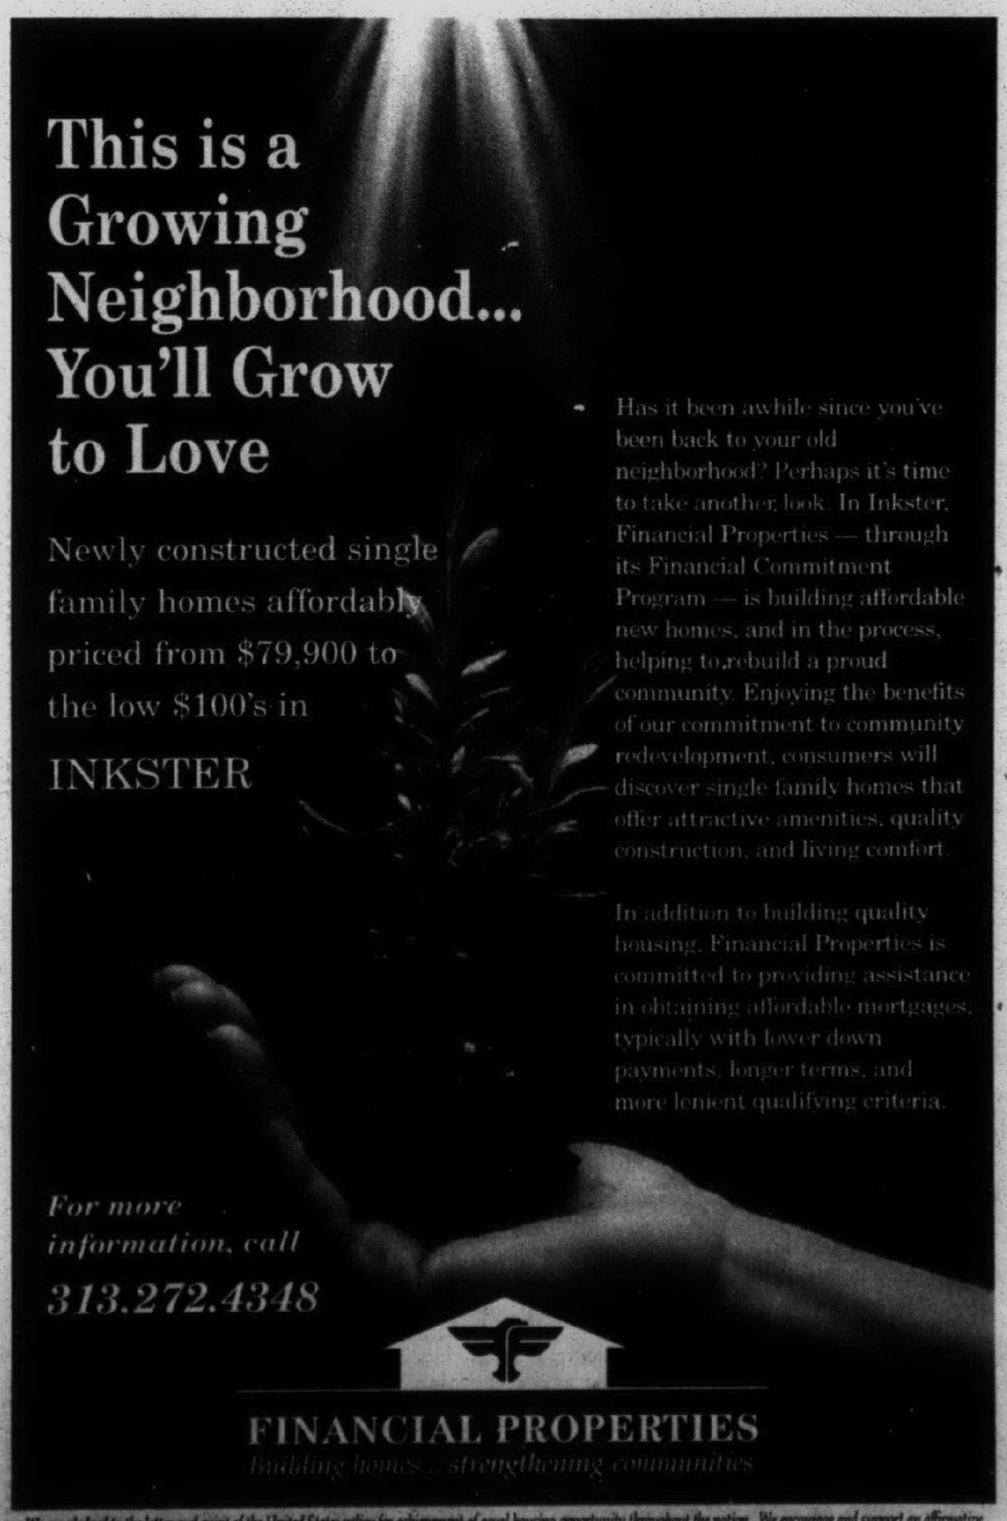

All three bedrooms cluster together on the opposite side of the house. Amenities in the master suite include a large walk-in closet, oversized shower, dual lavs, and a spa tub nestled into a corner walled with glass blocks. The sleeping area is quite a bit larger than either of the secondary bedrooms, and it has windows on two sides.

Bedrooms two and three share a bathroom outfitted with a combination tub and shower. Utilities nestle in a pass-through space that connects with the Edgemont's three-car garage. This location makes it ideal as a mudroom, convenient for wiping off dog paws or shucking off muddy footgear.

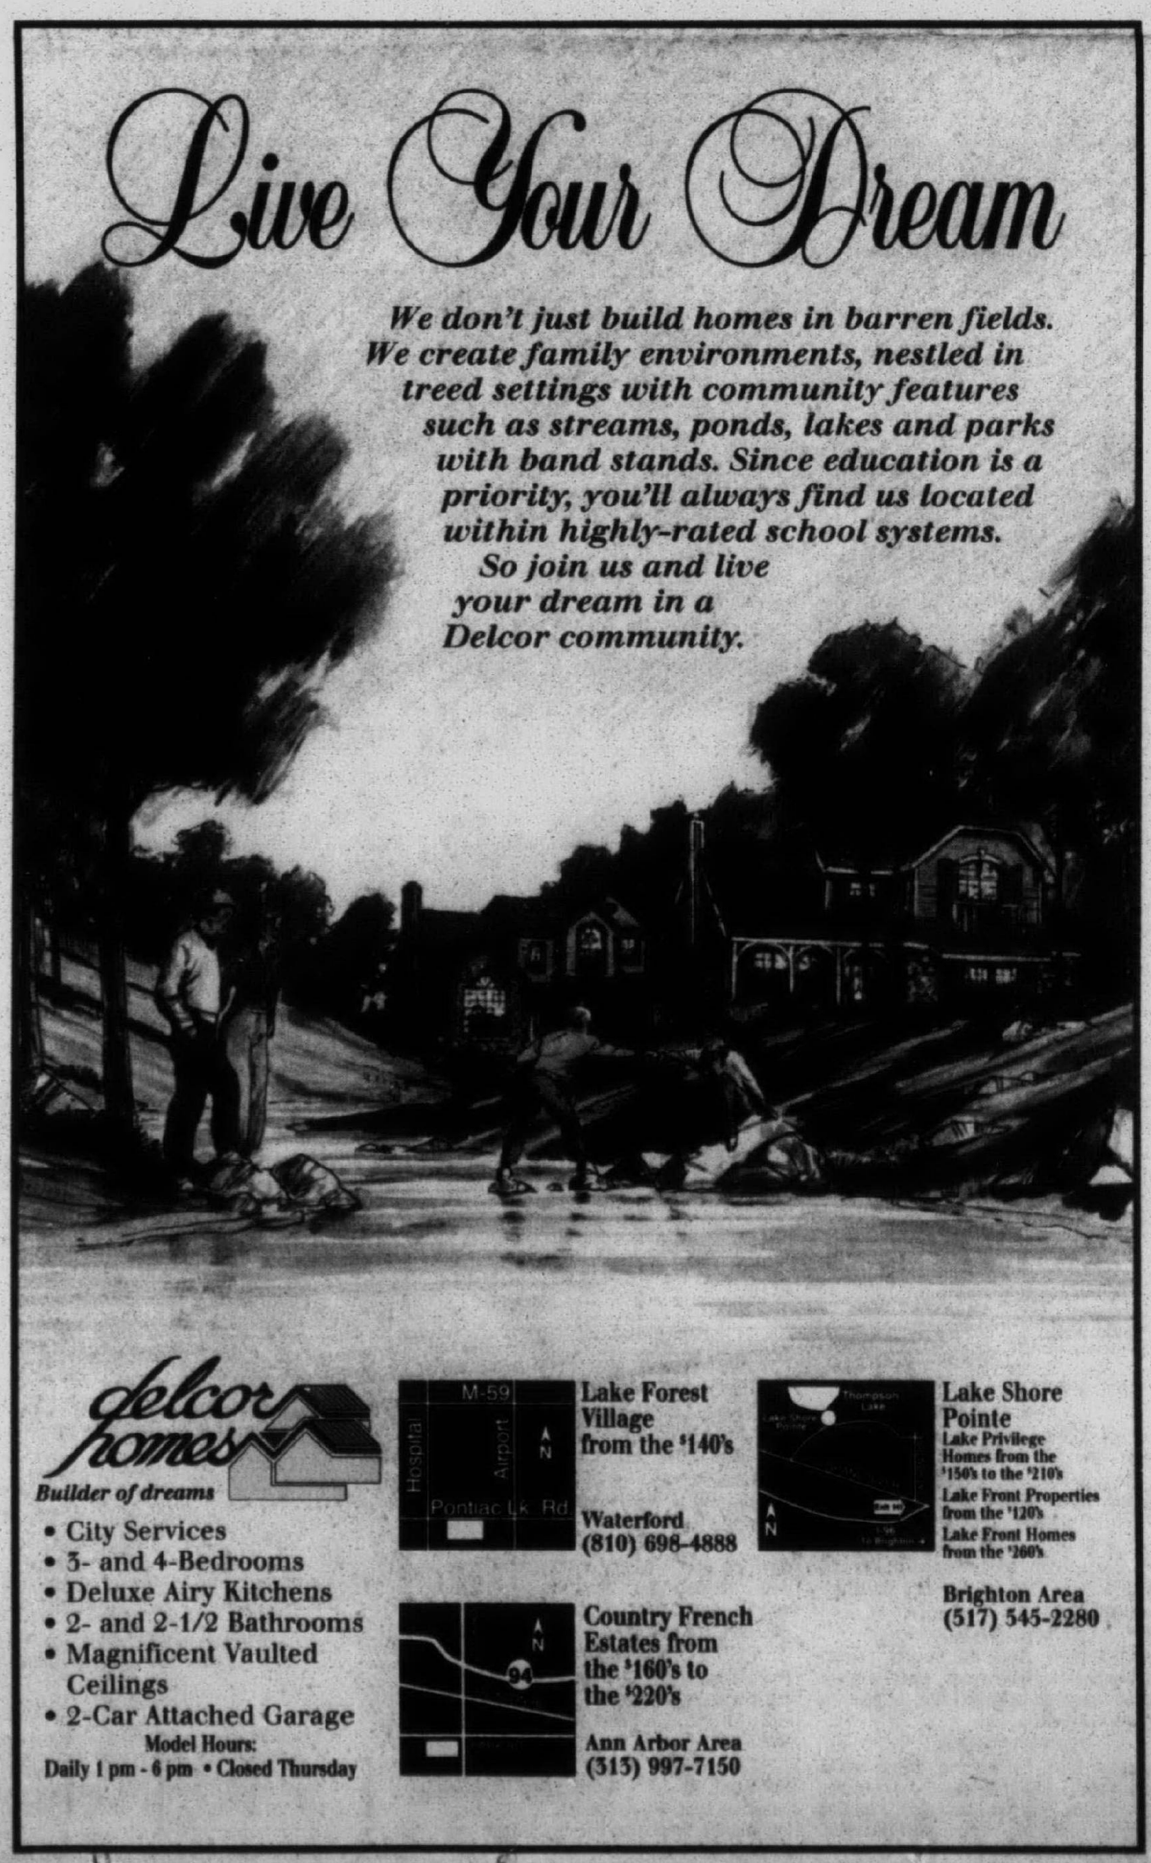

For a review plan, including scaled floor plans, elevations, section and artist's conception, send $15 to Associated Designs, 1100 Jacobs Dr., Eugene, Ore. 97402. Please specify the Edgemont 30-136 and include a return address when ordering. A catalog featuring over 170 home plans is available for $12. For more information call (800) 634-0123.

You don't have to be rich to use architect

STEVEN SIVAK

Although it may seem to many that in order to be an architectural patron one must be of extraordinary means, it need not be the case.

A recent article in the New York Times (March 6, 1997) entitled "Architectural Fizz on Beer Budgets" described how unrelated clients in Seattle and central Texas hired high-end architectural design firms to give each client the house that he wanted.

"Through resourcefulness and grit, they secured an architect's insights and creativeness at a price they could afford: $75 a square foot in Texas and $85 a square foot in the Seattle area, compared with roughly $120 for most architect-designed houses... Both architects charged their usual fee for residential work of 12-15 percent."

What is interesting about the way in which these individuals approached their need for a truly custom house is that they did not elect to lower costs by using "standardized" builders plans or models. The Seattle family hired the Miller-Hull Partnership and, having worked in Seattle for a number of years, I can attest to this firm's outstanding design ability. This is no developer's architect but rather a firm involved with the highest-quality of inventive and sensitive architecture. Bravo for the architect, and double bravo for the client with this kind of insight.

Certainly at this strained budget, lots of sacrifices had to be made by both the clients and the architects. For the Seattle family, when the bids came in, they decided to postpone items such as tile, carpet, mud room, garage and other finishes that could be added later.

Interestingly, both clients put a disproportionate number of dollars into the main living space. These are knows as the "Jesus spaces," spaces that cause one upon entering to exclaim 'Jesus!' Other rooms were designed more thriftily and conventionally.

The owners participated in applying the finishes and in adding decorative touches, which helped control costs. Remember what was discussed a few months back where I discussed how finishes wind up being the main difference between medium-budget projects and high-budget projects. A perfect example of this occurred in the Seattle house, where the owner spotted a school gym floor for sale and took it apart and reinstalled the narrow maple floor in his living room. Maybe this is what it takes to have something special and personal when the budget is modest. I believe that this kind of sweat equity is important and that it firmly connects the owner to the property and builds pride.

To me, what is most encouraging about these projects is the flexibility with which these two clients approached the design aspects of their houses. These two houses are not "wanna-be" fancy houses that were not affordable. Nor are they of the "junior-embassy" look that is so common in today's marketplace.

Perhaps this why they appear to be successful and legitimate pieces of architecture. The clients and the architects are pioneers in the true sense of the word.

The budget for the Seattle house was $187,000, and the architects stated to the client that while they could not guarantee the final cost of the project they would be "...up front with them as the design developed."

This is an important piece of information to remember, and it applies to all projects regardless of whether they are low budget or high budget. Only the person who is building the house can guarantee the cost of the construction.

Steve Sivak is a licensed architect in private practice and an adjunct professor of architecture at Lawrence Technological University in Southfield. He specializes in well-crafted residential and commercial architecture and can be contacted at (313) 769-8502.

Detroit Edison sets May-June line clearance schedule

As warm weather lures kids into trees and storm clouds into southeastern Michigan, Detroit Edison line clearance crews will work in many area communities to keep trees and branches a safe distance from Power lines.

In May and June, line-clearance crews will continue or begin work in the following communities: Commerce Township, Franklin, Independence Township, Livonia, Oxford, Oxford Township, Plymouth Township, Southfield and West Bloomfield Township.

Detroit Edison maintains a 10-foot clearance between tree branches and power lines to reduce the potential for power outages and assure electric service reliability and safety For customers.

"The recent ice storm really showed what can happen when branches come into contact with our lines," said Robert J. Buckler, executive vice president. "The vast majority of power outages are caused by interference from trees and our line clearance program has significantly reduced the potential for service interruptions."

Downed power lines, which also can result from contact with tree branches, also pose safety hazards. Adults should remind young children to stay away from fallen power lines and anything they are in contact with because they are potentially life threatening.

In addition, customers may experience low voltage or outages from trees in contact with power lines during normal weather.

Detroit Edison's tree trimming crews follow National Arborist Association standards, which are designed to maintain the health of trees.

How to divide your perennial flowers

By Lee Reich
For AP Special Features

One attraction of perennial flowers is their perennial nature – a single planting may last for years.

But "perennial" does not mean that the plants will necessarily last forever. With age, some perennials spread to form clumps whose centers die out as new growth pushes out the edges. The crowns of other types of perennials inch upward out of the ground each year, eventually dying from exposure to the elements.

The result, in either case, is less flowers. When this happens, it's time to divide the clump.

Wait until you see new, green growth in spring before dividing a perennial clump. Then the more vigorous, young growth, which is what you are going to save, will be obvious. Don't wait too long, though, or the plant will be shocked by this rough treatment.

To divide a clump, work around the edge with either a shovel or a spading fork, thrusting the tool into the ground at an angle to get under the clump. Push down the handle to lever the clump up and shake dirt loose from the roots. Eventually, you will have the clump laying on top of the ground.

Before pulling apart the clump, cut just the crown – not the roots – into pieces with either pruning shears or a sharp knife. Now go ahead and separate the crown pieces, teasing apart their attached roots.

Use your hands – or two garden forks held back-to-back in the center of the clump, then pulled apart at their handles. Save vigorous young crown pieces from the outside edge of the clump for replanting, keeping them covered with moist burlap or soil as long as they are out of the ground.

Take the opportunity, before you replant, to improve the soil. A bucketful of peat moss or compost in the planting hole will lighten clay soils and help sandy soils hold more water. Phosphorus is a plant nutrient that moves very slowly in the soil, so mix a handful of bone meal with the soil in the planting hole to ensure a good supply of phosphorus right near the roots.

Next, build a mound of soil in the planting hole on which to set the crown. Adjust the mound height so that when the soil is firmed the crown will be at ground level. Then, fill in the hole, sifting soil in around the roots. Put a layer of sawdust, straw or compost over the ground as mulch, and slowly water the plant with a gallon of water.

To look their best, perennials such as asters and hardy chrysanthemums need to be dug up, cut apart, then replanted every spr

Division only every three or four years is needed for the following perennial flowers: armeria, phlox, coral bells, Canterbury bells, cerastium, Siberian and Japanese irises, veronica, yarrow and Shasta daisy.

Although dividing perennials is a satisfying spring activity, some restraint is in order. Not all perennials want to be divided now. Oriental poppies, bleeding heart, bearded iris and Virginia cowslip go dormant in midsummer and that is when they should be divided.

And think twice before dividing perennials such as Christmas rose, peony, monkshood, butterfly weed, lupine and baby's breath. These flowers need division perhaps once a decade and they often show their resentment to the treatment by not blooming for a year or more thereafter.

Walk to Farmer's Market from this custom beauty

784 Forest Ave.
Plymouth
Coldwell Banker
Schweitzer-Bake
$189,900

Walk to the Farmer's Market every Saturday from May through October ... from your custom-built, two-story brick and cedar home in downtown Plymouth.

This attractive home offers three bedrooms, two and a half baths and a 1st floor master suite.

The two-story great room has a full brick fireplace, track lighting, wood windows and an open oak staircase that leads to two bedrooms and a full bath.

The beautiful kitchen has oak cabinets, wood flooring and plenty of cupboards and counter space. The dining area has a doorwall that leads to a three-seasoned glass sunroom. The rear yard is complete with a perennial garden.

The lower level is professionally finished and offers a gas fireplace and extra storage. Other amenities include ceramic foyer, beautiful landscaping, brick pavers and a three-car garage with finished upstairs storage.

Plymouth, Michigan, was named after Plymouth, Massachusetts, where some of the early settlers had lived.

Plymouth is known for many festivals including Fall Festival, Art in the Park and the International Ice Sculpture Spectacular.

Plus, don't forget our new 4th of July (Good Morning U.S.A.) Parade at 7:30 a.m. See you on Sunday.

Let's Talk About Real Estate

"SPENDING MONEY TO MAKE MONEY"

Have you ever noticed how the correct action that you should take in a certain situation is often something you really don't want to do? This happens to all of us and it often occurs when you are getting ready to sell your home.

After years of living in, repairing, and maintaining your home, it's time to move on. The last thing you want to do is invest one more dime in this house. A common quote heard from homeowners preparing to sell is, "Let the next owner spend money on it. I've invested enough". These feelings are certainly understandable, but this kind of attitude could cost you thousands of dollars when you attempt to sell your home for top dollar.

Smart dollars spent in fixing up your home at time of sale can yield a very handsome return. There are two kinds of repairs. Those that are obvious to a potential buyer and those that are not readily apparent. The more obvious repairs will be noticed by buyers and, if done in good taste, will motivate the buyer to pay you a higher price.

The best examples of wise improvements are those that involve decor such as carpeting. If the carpeting detracts from the appeal of your home, get it cleaned or replaced. Repaint and repaper wherever necessary. Get a new front door if it makes a poor first impression. If the dishwasher no longer works, buy a new one.

These repairs pay off because ninety percent of all buyers don't want to spend money or effort on the home they buy. Sure, some people love to fix up and paint up, but the great majority don't. They will pay more for a home that is in "move in" condition.

Motivated buyers who find your home appealing not only pay more for a home but also buy your home sooner, thus shortening the time you have to go through the hassle of having your home ready to show each day.

SUGGESTION: I know how distasteful it is to spend additional money on a home you are preparing to leave. Yet, experience has proven that a few dollars spent wisely can maximize your selling price. Ask for your REALTOR's® advice.

JOBS/CAREERS

Outsourcing Offers Long Term Opportunities

By Sheryl Silver, Career Source

Outsourcing---it's a word that's become very familiar in recent years as more and more companies have chosen to contract out---or outsource---various functions previously performed by their full time employees.

According to Jan Wahby, vice president of commercial corporate sales for Interim Services, a nationwide provider of flexible staffing headquartered in Ft. Lauderdale, Florida, the trend by organizations to outsource non-core functions is continuing to grow and diversify. Wahby says companies today are outsourcing everything from customer service centers to information technology (IT) functions. "There's huge growth in the outsourcing of IT functions," she observes. "We're also seeing HR functions, including benefits administration and training, being outsourced by some organizations."

Despite the growing popularity of outsourcing, industry insiders say job seekers still have misconceptions about it. Many people, they say, equate outsourcing with traditional temporary assignments and so don't pursue these opportunities when looking for jobs offering job security or longevity with a single employer. "They don't realize our assignments are long term---for the life of the contract---which can often be 3-5 years or even indefinitely," says Jackie Foster, eastern region manager for Tascor, the outsourcing division of Norrell Corporation, the Atlanta-headquartered staffing company with offices nationwide. "And although we initially hire people to work on a particular contract, we also look for new opportunities for them when those contracts end."

Foster says employees assigned to outsourcing contracts with Tascor clients are actually full time employees of Tascor. With that full time status comes benefits. "We offer a full scale benefits package that includes medical and dental benefits and 401k participation," says Foster.

Employees assigned to outsourcing contracts through Interim Services also receive benefits. "Usually the package provided is closely aligned with our customer's benefits, particularly if it's a long term contract," says Wahby. "Otherwise, the benefits we offer our contractors are the same as Interim's full time employees receive."

What about advancement potential? In traditional employment environments, that tends to be a prime attraction for top performing staff members. "Outsourcing offers advancement opportunities too," says Wahby.

One way people advance, she says, is by picking up new skills on each contract. "Those new skills add to that person's market value," says Wahby. "As they go up the skill chain, they earn more."

Employees can also advance into supervisory and management roles. "Someone who's performed well in a call center situation, for example, may be given training to become a supervisor in a similar setting on a subsequent contract," explains Foster.

Supervisory training isn't the only type of continuing education employees assigned to outsourcing contracts receive. Foster says her organization provides technical training as well as training in soft skills (e.g. customer service, listening) as those capabilities are needed by employees on various contracts. Wahby says Interim develops and provides training to its contractors on various topics (e.g. customer service) and in some cases, partners with clients where contractors are working to provide training in needed skills.

Considering all they offer, you may wonder what outsourcing companies look for when hiring. Foster says her ideal candidate is "someone who likes the diversity of different opportunities, someone who is self-motivated, who's willing to take on different roles, and who is open to accepting additional responsibility." She also says a high priority for her "are people willing to make commitments for the life of the contracts to which they're assigned."

Wahby agrees that a commitment to complete each contract is essential. In addition, she says a good work ethic, flexibility and communication skills are part of her ideal candidate profile. "People need to flex with different cultures and situations and be able to communicate effectively in all of them" says Wahby.

WORKING LIFE: Keeping Your Job Search on Course

By Deborah L. Jacobs, Chronicle Features

How long does it take to find a job? One month for each $10,000 of salary is the stock answer career counselors and headhunters usually give. But in truth, no one can really predict how quickly you'll land the next spot. Here are some ways to keep your job search on track:

•Use more than one job-hunting technique. Rather than just relying on the want ads, try more individualized methods that don't generate as much competition from other job-hunters.

Most people get jobs because they hear about an opening from someone they know. You can start by making a list of friends, family, neighbors and former coworkers.

No matter how bummed out you may feel, try to sound upbeat when you call. Highlight your credentials and the kind of job you hope to land. Ask everyone you talk with about giving you names of other people to contact.

Another way to up your odds is by getting in touch with businesses directly. The best gateway is not the personnel department, but going through managers in parts of the company where you could work.

Ideally, you'll have leads to them through someone you've already contacted. If not, you might have to make some extra phone calls. For instance, someone with a marketing background would want to find out who's in charge of selling each of the company's major products. in a large company, that could yield many prospects.

Using index cards or computer software, maintain a log of contacts. you'll want to include the date you spoke, the gist of the conversation, any correspondence that followed, and how you plan to follow up Send thank-you notes to people who spend a half hour or more talking with you by phone, who meet with you in person, or who refer you to another helpful lead.

•Stick to a schedule. Looking for work is a full-time job. If you're still employed, you may need to start the day earlier, and end later to make time for phone calls and meetings. You can use evenings and weekends to write letters and do library work.

To ward off the job-hunting blues, people who are out of work should also adopt a routine. That means getting up and going to bed at the same time every day, and using a calendar. At the end of each day, make a realistic list of tasks you'd like to accomplish on the following one.

If you're conducting a job search from home, try to set up a work space free from distractions Those who share a home phone with others might consider getting an extra line for job-hunting. Ask the phone company about voice-mail, which can take messages when you're not there or when you're on the phone (more polite than "call waiting").

•Build a support system. Even with all the layoffs in recent years, many people are still ashamed of being unemployed. One way to overcome that is by tapping into a job-support group. Coworkers laid off together have an instant source of camaraderie. Other possibilities are groups forming through churches, synagogues and community organizations. Or, check the phone book for the nearest branch of Forty Plus, a nationwide network for displaced workers.

Finally, when you do land a spot, don't let the contacts go stale. In today's volatile job market, you never know when you'll need them next.

Don't make these mistakes when marketing on-line

By Alice Bredin, Tribune Media

To succeed on-line you need to know how to market your home-based business. But it is equally important to know what (ital) not (end ital) to do. The rules of Web marketing are strict; breaking them will guarantee you'll incur the wrath of the people you want to reach.

To help you avoid some of the pitfalls of on-line marketing of your home-based business, I have assembled the following list of "Don'ts":

•Don't create a Web site until you know why you want to have one. As is the case with all marketing tools, a Web site will be most effective for your home-based business if it is well-directed and seen by the right people. Use your site's purpose to shape its content and promotion.

•Don't be lazy. Avoid forcing customers to visit your site in lieu of receiving marketing information through the mail or over the phone. Supplement your marketing with the Web, don't replace it.

•Don't accost people's eyes with many flashing graphics. Make sure you don't load your site up with graphics just for graphics' sake. In general, young audiences like flashing, blinking items on Web sites; older audiences do not.

•Don't use your Web site as a purely commercial tool. Supplement product facts with useable, free information for your visitors. Many of the people who are on the Web want information. They will come back to your site if they learn something.

•Don't advertise in newsgroups and on mail lists. Newsgroups and mail lists are tools for sharing information. It is acceptable to promote your business subtly once you have provided useful, free information, but it is frowned upon to directly solicit people.

•Don't throw print material up on Web. If you provide articles or news items on your site, make sure they are adapted for the Web. Short copy, headlines, lists and other easy-to-read items are "Web friendly," long articles are not.

•Don't make it difficult to order. On many Web site you have to look all over for the way to order. Be explicit about how people can order from you by using an "Order Here" button on your home page or every page of your site, if appropriate. Provide many options for contacting your company, including the following basics: mail, phone, fax, e-mail and secure server.

•Don't overuse key words. If you use the practice that has become popular on the Web of repeating key words in your page title, header and body text, your page may rank higher when someone undertakes a key word search.

Some search engines have automatic searchers that go around and hunt for key words, if they get a site that has lots of the same key word, it gets moved up the list.

However, some search engine companies are starting to avoid displaying sites that have a key word mentioned more than eight times on a home page, so using this tactic may make your site more difficult to find.

•Don't sponsor a contest unless you can manage increased traffic. Also be sure that you can handle the e-mail overload.

•Don't forget to announce your site. Send out a press release announcing your Web site to your mail and e-mail lists. Also send it to local newspapers, magazines, radio and TV stations, as well as to newsletters and associations that service your target customers. If your site has road appeal, send the release to sites such as CNET (www.cnet.com) and NetGuide (www.netguide.com) that review other Web sites.

AT WORK

The Risk of Letting Go

By Lindsey Novak, Tribune Media

Q: I've been working at the same company for five years, but have been thinking about looking for a new job for more money and opportunity for advancement. My fear is the risk I would be taking, because I feel so secure in my job. Most of the people I work with appreciate me, especially my boss. My office is like a second home to me. What should I do?

A: Only you can decide whether to stay at or leave a job, but here are some things to consider: Do you enjoy the work you do and are you paid fairly? Are you solely interested in moving up the corporate ladder, or are you equally interested in your work environment? Can you live comfortably on your salary or do you often find yourself short on cash? How do you think you would react if a new boss were short-tempered, demanding and heartless?

Money and advancement are not everything. A lot of people would love to work at the type of company you describe. Prioritize your values and get to know yourself you can make an educated decision. Without such a list, life will lead you, and not necessarily where you want to go.

BAD RESUME LEADS TO NUMEROUS REJECTIONS

Q: I received my master's in business administration from a state university. After job hunting for several years, I've received over 300 rejection letters. I find it hard to believe that all these places have no job openings. Any suggestions?

A: It sounds like you have blanketed the Midwest with you resume. Sending out mass mailings works for some people, but it sounds like you need to focus on advertised job openings that suit your background. If you have answered hundreds of classified ads and have only received rejections, there is something wrong with your resume and cover letter.

Go to your university's job placement center for alumni and ask for counseling on resume and cover letter writing and job searches. Once your resume is professionally written, you may want to register with an employment agency, but stay away from any that want to charge you instead of the employer.

A PERMANENT JOB SUDDENLY BECOMES TEMPORARY

Q: Our company has internal audits requiring descriptions of each job and the department at various times during the year. Though we do not need to know everyone's job duties, we need to know the flow chart for the work and procedures. My job was recently changed, so I asked my boss for a newdescription. He advised me to give my old description, so I asked if a new one was going to eventually be written. He stumbled for words and then told me my job was going to only be temporary, so a new description wasn't needed. I was at a loss for words. No one ever explained to me that the position wa not permanent. Should I confront my boss or go to a higher authority? I had heard that my company doesn't fire anyone, but I feel insecure about my future there.

A: Anyone would be shocked to hear that a permanent job has suddenly turned into a temporary position. Confrontations are rarely the way to get what you want. Your boss may simply be a poor communicator and he may already have a job change planned for you. Ask to meet with him to discuss your future with the company and be positive. If he tells you that you will be released when your position ends, stay polite and positive and you may be able to negotiate a very favorable severance settlement. Privately, you also may want to consult a lawyer to discuss the terms on which you were originally hired.

A few weeks ago, I found a Barracuda. 1998 Ford Contour is hot

CAReport

By Anne Fracassa
Avanti NewsFeatures

When I drove the Ford Contour and its sister, the Mercury Mystique, just three years ago, I dismissed many of its faults because we were driving pre-production vehicles.

You see, Ford was so excited about introducing the Contour and Mystique, which were part of Ford's all-important global plan, that it rushed the cars into the hands of demanding journalists.

Well, here's the 1998 Contour, freshly introduced again, with new sheet metal, a new engine, new interior, new suspension and new front and rear treatments.

I like it.

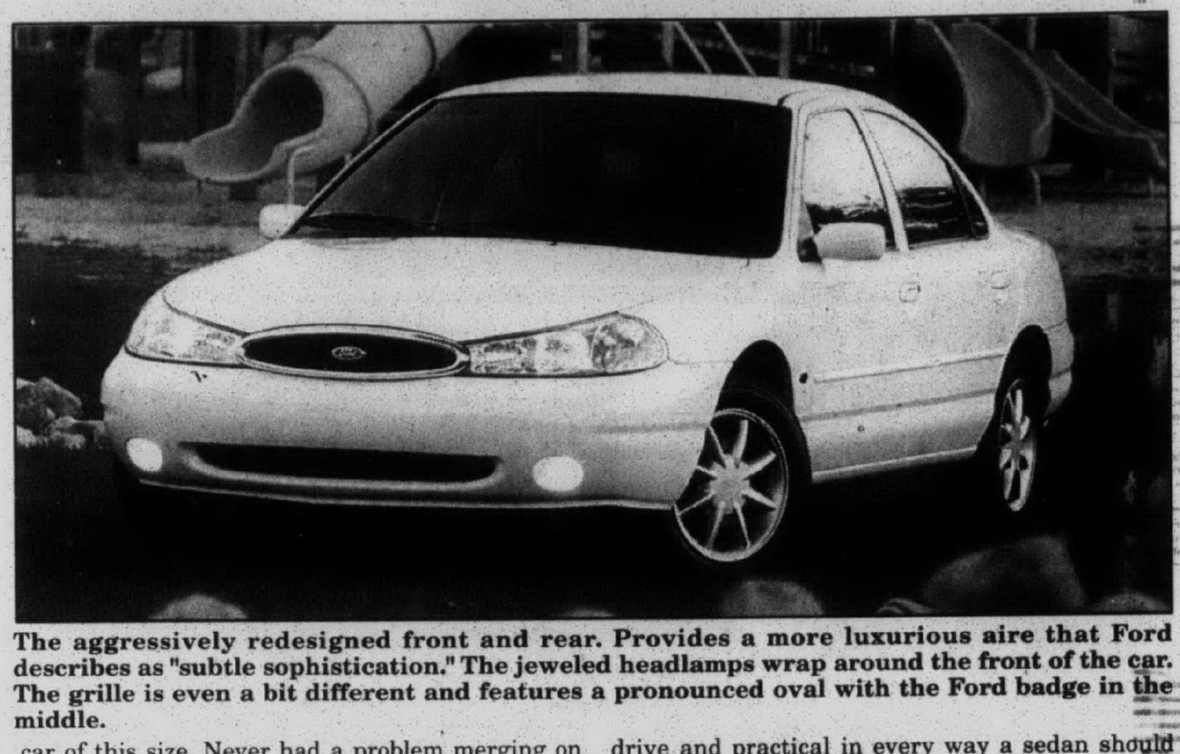

It's prettier, it's got spunk and it's comfortable to drive. Besides that, it's much sportier than any other Contour has ever been.

And, once again, Ford reeled in the price — even though much has changed, it costs the same as the previous model. The base price is $13,995.

There are four Contour models to choose from: The GL, LX, SE and a new performance-oriented SVT. The top-of-the-line SVT starts at $22,900.

So, just how many changes have been made to Contour for 1998? To be exact, 103.

Let's start with the most important. The Contour is now powered by a revised 2.0-liter 16-valve inline 4 cylinder Zetec engine that provides a respectable 125 horsepower. Just perfect for a car of this size. Never had a problem merging on the freeway or pulling away from a light.

The aggressively redesigned front and rear. Provides a more luxurious aire that Ford describes as "subtle sophistication." The jeweled headlamps wrap around the front of the car. The grille is even a bit different and features a pronounced oval with the Ford badge in the middle.

The Zetec engine is standard on both the GL and LX models. Also available is a 2.5-liter 24-valve V6 Duratec engine that gives you some oomph at 170 hosepower. It's an option on the LX, but standard on the SE. The Duratec has an aluminum block and cylinder heads, in case you're wondering.

Now here's the surprising part. Here you have a 4-door compact sedan that's practical for an average family. Sounds boring, right?

Hardly.

It's got a pleasant road feel. It hugs the road so tightly that you can have a bit of fun driving the Contour. You can whip it around a corner and it will accomodate you.

But it's also at home hauling the kids to their weekly swim lessons. (I speak from experience.) What I'm saying here is that the Contour is fun to drive and practical in every way a sedan should be. Especially when it comes to comfort and quietness (the car, not the kids).

I like the aggressively redesigned front and rear a lot. The new look provides a more luxurious aire that Ford describes as "subtle sophistication." The jeweled headlamps wrap around the front of the car. The grille is even a bit different and features a pronounced oval with the Ford badge in the middle.

The rear treatment lends itself to look more like a Mercury at first, but as you approach it, the Ford oval is smack in the middle. The rear deck, complete with its upper chrome strip and integrated license plate area, looks sharp.

On the inside, instrumentation is easy to understand and operate. And you'll find a new console and more legroom in the rear. The center console and more legroom in the rear. The center console has two cupholders for front passengers, but only one for the rear passengers. It also has a bin that opens at the top and can fit a small ladies purse.

The front bucket seats are comfy and can accommodate a long-legged person. In the rear, you'll find a 60/40 split-fold rear seat that's standard on the LX and SE, but optional on the GL. The split-fold rear seat will give you even more versatility when hauling large and bulky items. Even the trunk is spacious — 13.9 cubic feet.

The rear seat has room for three and there's even a three-point safety belt for the middle passenger. An integrated child safety seat is optional.

Safety features include dual front air bags, front and rear energy-absorbing crumple zones and side-impact protection.

Expect this new Contour to be one of the hottest cars in 1998.
